2 INJURED IN FIRE AT SALEM

SALEM, Jan. 14.—Charles H. Miller, ninety-three, was overcome by smoke and Ralph Lang, his eight-year-old grandson, was burned about the face during a fire which practically destroyed the two-story wooden building at No. 27 Williams street, and caused a damage of $1,000. The aged man and the boy, with Mrs. Lydia H. Lang, the boy's mother, were rescued from the burning building by neighbors who rushed through the smoke and flames and carried them to the street.

Mr. Miller was almost suffocated. He and the boy were hurried to the Salem Hospital. The boy was not seriously burned. Mrs. Lang was unhurt and was cared for in the house of a neighbor.

The firemen had a hard fight to save adjoining houses.

Just before the old man and the boy retired, a couch standing near the stove in the kitchen caught fire, and Ralph and his grandfather threw pails of water upon it to quench the flames. Believing they had extinguished the fire, they went up stairs to bed. Mrs. Lang and retired a short time previous.

An hour later neighbors discovered flames bursting from the kitchen windows. As there were no signs of the occupants of the building, several persons who had been attracted to the scene by the blaze rushed into the house. Mrs. Lang was found asleep in a rear room and was carried to the street.

Inspector Day of the police department and two other men rushed upstairs to the rooms on the second floor. The flames had just reached that floor when they stumbled across Mr. Miller unconscious in the hallway. He had been overcome by smoke while trying to escape from the building, and was slowly suffocating.

Ralph had tried to reach his grandfather but was driven back by the flames and was burned about the face.

It is believed the fire in the couch re-kindled and set fire to the house.

SAYS WIFE URGED HER TO MURDER

WHEELING, W. Va., Jan. 14.—Declaring he had established the two main points in the State's fight to convict Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk of attempting to poison her husband, Prosecuting Attorney Handlan expressed his belief today that the case against the defendant had been clinched.

"We have established the fact that two kinds of poison were administered to John O. Schenk, and we have established the motive through the testimony of Dan Phillips," declared Mr. Handlan.

"Mrs. Schenk was in love with Phillips—that is the reason she wanted to get rid of her husband. Lindy Wilson, Mrs. Schenk's chauffeur, will give testimony of a highly sensational nature, in fact, his testimony will be the real thriller of the trial. Nurse Kline will testify as to Mrs. Schenk's being the one who administered the poison.

"We have not yet decided whether Mr. Schenk shall be put on the stand.

Dr. J. B. Thornton, the medical expert, was the first witness summoned by the State today. Albert Lash, the youngest juror on the panel, received the congratulations of the lawyers when he came into court. A son had been born at his home during the night.

Mrs. Schenk in Vaudeville.

Mrs. Schenk smiled brightly at the juror when she heard the news. After shaking hands with her lawyers, she read a morning paper, while Dr. Thornton gave the first testimony. When she was asked what she thought of the case so far, she said: "I am perfectly satisfied."

Dan Phillips, who testified against Mrs. Schenk yesterday, appeared in court today wearing one of the coats and a diamond ring that the defendant had given to him. Reports that Mrs. Schenk had received a number of offers to go into vaudeville were denied by her today.

After explaining the difference between

"37" CLEW IN WHARF TRAGEDY

The number "37" worked into the case of the twenty-year-old girl found dead on Central Wharf is the only clew to her identity. Upon this slender clew the authorities base their entire hope of being able to clear the mystery which surrounds her name and death.

The girl was first identified as Miss Marie Sumpter, at one time an intimate of the House of the Good Shepherd. It was to-day ascertained that she was not the girl. The body is now at the Morris Bros. undertaking rooms. The girl's corsets is all that bears the number "37." Efforts are now being made to connect this number with the girl's identity.

Tragedy of City Life.

Behind the death of this slender, gray-eyed girl, lies one of the pitiful tragedies of the city that are hidden many times by the death certificate phrase, "natural causes."

When Medical Examiner Magrath looked at the girl first he declared that she was too young to die of natural causes. While his autopsy must be taken as final, so far as the immediate cause of the girl's death is concerned, there are several things unexplained.

Who is the girl?

Who is the man who stood by her with her hat in one hand and a bottle in the other?

How was her lip cut and two of her teeth knocked out?

What made the cut on her nose?

Irving Cunningham, the second mate of the Gloucester, a level-headed, intelligent man, was one of the first to examine the girl as she lay in the harbor passageway on the wharf. He looked at her closely and he said that it was his opinion that the girl had been knocked down by a heavy blow from a man's fist and then that she had been strangled.

Plain Signs of Struggle.

The condition of the girl's hair, her torn shirt waist and her disarranged clothing as they were when Cunningham saw them, showed that the girl had not simply laid down and died, but that there had been a fierce struggle with some one.

If the girl had a weak heart and was brutally treated by some one, it may have killed her and the autopsy surgeons say she died from heart trouble or "natural causes."

Under the belief that the girl had at some time been in one of the institutions for girls in Boston, several officials went to the morgue to-day to try to identify the girl.

Several men and women who knew of girls that were missing and who thought that they might be able to tell who the girl was went to the morgue to-day and were allowed to look at the wharf victim.

There is a tag bearing the number, 37, on the girl's corsets. The authorities say that the corset, the shoes and some of her other clothing was apparently made in the Institutions. For that reason an attempt is being made to trace her identity through those channels.

The girl was a mere child. She weighed eighty-five pounds and was five feet one inch in height. Her eyes were gray, the eyebrows being light and scanty. Her face was scarred. Two upper front teeth are missing. Her clothing consisted of a black clevicr walking suit, two black underskirts, a white waist and corset, bal briggan underwear, black stockings and black laced shoes. Her clothing was not expensive.

At one time the girl was pretty, but the tragedies of her life had robbed her of her beauty. On the body was a scar indicating an operation for appendicitis.

WHO IS THIS GIRL?

COLLIER DEAL STORY TOLD BY BUTLER AMES

Congressman Butler Ames today told in detail the story which he says ex-Secretary of the Navy Newberry related to him and others of how President Roosevelt rebuked Senator Lodge for trying to get the government to buy two colliers for $500,000.

Mr. Ames, in repeating the story, declared he could not believe that ex-Secretary Newberry had denied it. The collier incident has become a leading issue in the Massachusetts senatorial fight.

CHARGES MADE BY CONGRESSMAN AMES.

This is the whole story as Congressman Ames told it today to a reporter of this newspaper:

"I cannot believe that Former Assistant Secretary of the Navy Newberry said in a New York last night that there was not a word of truth in the story I have told concerning the attempted purchase at the request of Senator Lodge of two colliers for the use of the United States navy.

"The story of the transaction involving these colliers was told to me by Assistant Secretary Newberry himself.

"Mr. Newberry told the same story to fifty others in Washington and Newport. In Mack's magazine, the National Monthly of Buffalo, made it the subject of an exposé article early last spring.

"I can only reconcile Mr. Newberry's direct denial as a denial not of the story of the transaction as I relate it, but as denying the fact that President Roosevelt 'called him down.'

"Assistant Secretary Newberry refused to lend his name. It was a clear case of extortion upon the part of financial interests in Boston who had these two boats—the Tremont and Suffolk, lying idle on their hands at the Fore River yards in Quincy.

Engineered by Lodge.

"The boats were to be unloaded upon the government at a cost, beyond their real value, of $1,000,000 or more.

"Senator Lodge deftly engineered the thing through the Committee on Naval Affairs and afterwards had the proposition put through Congress as an amendment to the sundry appropriation bill.

"The tonnage and measurements of the colliers were so altered as to show in the innocent-appearing offer that Senator Lodge attached to the sundry appropriation bill.

"The measurements were down to an inch. There were only two boats in all the United States that fitted these measurements and when the bill became a law Secretary Newberry found it up to him to purchase the two boats. They were the only two in the country lying idle and all new, down in the Fore River yards at Quincy.

"Instead of purchasing these boats, despite the fact that they were the only two that could pursue in conformity to the act of Congress Secretary Newberry refused to lend the name and influence and turned down Senator Lodge. As he turned down Senator Lodge, shortly after the Senator had come to him repeatedly that Lodge felt that Newberry had failed the President and Secretary Newberry and Lodge in the White House with the President.

"Called" by Roosevelt.

"Newberry said President Roosevelt, can't you and my friend, Cabot get together on this proposition?'

"Secretary Newberry then told President Roosevelt the whole history of the job, and the President declared that he did not approve such a purchase or become a party to such a deal and ordered a cessation of his talk of office.

"President Roosevelt after listening to Secretary Newberry's explanation turned to Senator Lodge and said:

"'Lodge, you must not to monkey with these things. Secretary Newberry is absolutely right.'

"Secretary Newberry and Senator Lodge left the White House together and within a few days the Secretary himself told me the story, which was related about a year by Frank B. Lord, the representative of Mack's magazine in Washington. Newberry told Lord the same story.

"It is absolutely true every word of it, and more could be added to it because Senator Lodge at the same time attempted to put through other boats bought by the government for use on the Panama Canal, at an exorbitant price.

Calls Act Reprehensible.

"Secretary Newberry may have denied that President Roosevelt called Senator Lodge down, but I have mentioned the particular words, 'Calling down,' or 'called down.' I simply related the interview and the part President Roosevelt took in it and this Mr. Newberry will not deny.

"The attitude of Senator Lodge in the whole transaction is all the more reprehensible because the fact that he urged the purchase of the two colliers upon the ground that our magnificent fleet of sixteen battleships was returning from its world-wide cruise and would need to be met by the Atlantic fleet so as not to enter their home port after their splendid showing round the world.

"We haven't the colliers,' the Senator argued, 'but we shortly will have them.'

As a matter of fact a few days before the fleet arrived at this argument all the colliers necessary for coaling the fleet had been secured and were ready and were then on the high seas with all the coal they needed.

MAJORITY VOTE FOR RECALL.

Representative John D. McGovern of Roxbury has a bill in the House providing for an amendment to the Boston charter that a majority of the voters voting on the question of a recall of the Mayor of Boston shall be sufficient to recall. Under Schmidt, special agent in charge of the Department of Justice. The information that led to the arrests was brought to the attention of the government by Edward A. The trio made a assignment for benefit of creditors to Edward A. Merrifield, associated with the law firm of Jacobs & Jacobs, who, acting for those creditors, petitioned the firm into bankruptcy on May 4. Later three schedules were filed. One firm claimed liabilities of $15,699.21 and assets of $2,350.00.

REBELLION AMONG GARMENT STRIKERS

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—Open revolt against leaders in the strike of the garment workers in Chicago became apparent today when the insurgent strikers had extended an invitation to Clarence Darrow, the attorney, to lead the strike. Darrow refused. Those who have seceded from the main body are said to number nearly 15,000. They will draw up agreement proposals of their own and present them to the clothing manufacturers. The new agreement, according to new leaders, demands an increase in wages, dismissal of strike-breakers, the re-employment of all strikers without discrimination and the abolition of the fine system and piecework.

CARNEGIE FOR LABOR COMPENSATION ACT

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Nine out of ten strikes are due to employers' assistants, not to any question of the money involved, in the opinion of Andrew Carnegie. "The more capital does for labor the more profit the employer has to pay," said Mr. Carnegie. "I have not had any strikes in twenty-five years. I have not let any one have anything to say about labor but myself. I have thought that the workingman's compensation act was a step toward closer relationship between employer and employe.

WOULD HAVE WOMEN VOTE.

A bill to allow women who own property to vote in municipal elections was presented in the House by Robert E. Boffo

ESCAPE BLAZING HOME BY LADDER

Fire in the two-story wooden dwelling at No. 2 Winslow street, Malden, caused a damage of $400. The house is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Monari. Mr. Mosari was awakened by the crying of his baby daughter Frederica, who was in a crib on the second floor, and found that the lower portion of the house was blazing fiercely. Mrs. Monari escaped by the rear stairs, her husband following with their child. Mr. Monari re-entered the house to save some of his effects. He went to the floor. His escape was cut off by the flames, which had reached the stairway. Opening a window he called to the firemen, who had just arrived in answer to an alarm, to put up a ladder. He got down the ladder in safety.

TRAINMEN FATALLY HURT BY EXPLOSION

KANKAKEE, Ills., Jan. 4.—Three trainmen were fatally injured by the boiler of engine Number 55 on South bound Illinois Central freight train exploded while the train was standing on a side track today. The injured men are engineer G. H. Naughton, Fireman Murphy and Head Brakeman Hoffman.

AVIATION TESTS BY ARMY AND NAVY

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 14.—It became known today that army and navy officers have been detailed to take part in experiments in aviation which will last several months on a block Island near Coronado Beach. Glen Curtiss has agreed to experiment in having biplanes alight on and rise from the water. He will use a floating skid or perhaps light pontoons.

TROOPS TO AID SENATE BOLTERS

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Jan. 14.—Troops were to-day ordered held in readiness to move at once if any attempt is made to arrest the Republican legislators who have bolted from the Senate. The Republicans and Democrats are in a dilemma over the question of organizing the State Senate. The Republicans refused to go into joint session after they had held a caucus and determined upon their course. They retired to the assembly rooms and spent the entire night behind locked doors. The Republicans appealed to Governor Glasscock, who is himself a Republican, asking protection. The Governor told them that if any attempt were made to arrest them he would call out the militia to protect them.

The main fight is on State Senator J. G. Hearn of Ohio county, whom the Democrats are trying to unseat so as to give them a majority in the upper house.

$400 MORE SENT TO AID CIGAR STRIKE

Boston Cigarmakers' Union No. 97 sent $400 to the striking cigarmakers of Tampa, Fla., as a result of a dispatch received by Henry Abrahams, secretary of the local union. The dispatch said that the strikers' paper, El Internationale, was raided on January 12, that the presses were destroyed and that the editors and workmen were chased from the city by an armed band. The dispatch stated that the paper would still be printed in Lake Ybor, a few miles from Tampa. The striking cigarmakers of Tampa thought that the newspapers were not giving the union a fair deal, and started the El Internationale to print the union's side of the story. At the meeting of the local union it was voted to send $1,000 in $400 installments. With the $400 sent the union has sent $8,800 to the strikers since last July.

SEEKS R. R. EXIGENCY RIGHTS IN NEW BILL

John H. Bickford, engineer of the Boston & Eastern railroad in its plan for a new Boston, Lynn, Salem and Beverly rapid transit road, has filed with the clerk of the House a bill which provides that the General Court shall instruct the railroad commissioners to hear and record any petition of reference to the road. Last year the commissioners were given the power to issue the certificate if they so desired. They refused. Now Engineer Bickford would have law enacted which would force the issue.

EXTEND TIME FOR RAISE IN R. R. RATES

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The Interstate Commerce Commission to-day suspended all advances in rates on railroads operating west of Chicago until March 15. The rates had already been suspended until February 1. The decision to-day follows the announcement of the suspension of the rates on Eastern roads. The action to-day was taken in order that the commission can consider both cases and hand down decisions at the same time.

Ode to Our Fog

THE world afoot on sea and bay was slow in getting up to-day, and every skipper in his log made comments on the stubborn fog, remarking you can bet your life that you could cut it with a knife, for that is what all skippers say of heavy fogs that block their way. 'Twas much like any other fog that often has been known to clog the harbor gates, inspiring all the ship news men to call it "pall," describing it likewise as gray, a very proper thing to say. The sirens wailed down at the Light and T Wharf fishermen could sight but little through the misty mist, which they predicted would persist perhaps until the break of day, but hoped that it would break away enough to let the liners in at anchor in the muffled din.

AMATEUR SHOW AT COLUMBIA FUNNY

The amateurs held away for an hour at the Columbia Theatre last night, and while their performance as a whole was above the average, the hook was called into play six times. The fun was fast and furious from the start. Marie Morey, a pretty little singer, ran the Daley brothers, clog dancers, so close for first honors that the purse had to be split, while Peter Daley, a South Boston singer and dancer, landed in second place.

BLIZZARD HEADS TOWARD BOSTON

The pessimists who have predicted a green Winter and a fat graveyard for New England may find need of quickly revising their forecast of a blizzard which is sending up the West and seems headed for Boston and the New England groups gets here. And the local weather forecaster may say they have every reason to believe it will sweep New England within twenty-four hours.

It began to hail in Boston early in the day and this changed into rain and later into a flurry of sleet. Back lately miles or more where the altitude reaches around 5500 feet and from there on up to the hill land summits, where the rain quickly changed to a steely snow which in an hour had covered the United States to a two inch depth and more.

The Weather Bureau said the temperature was falling steadily, and that Sunday would surely be most degrees colder. The Canadian Pacific officials at Vancouver, B. C., reported keeping a semblance of traffic with their snowplows. Trains due there last Monday are days late.

Reno, Nev., counted two feet of snow, and the prospect is the greatest storm since the blizzard of 1888. More than 200 feet of Southern Pacific snowsheds collapsed at Truckee, Cal. Eight feet of snow at that point has already buried that county. The storm is general in Nevada.

Five eastbound trains, many of them carrying New England folk, are snowbound in the line ranging near Colfax, while six westbound trains are practically stalled between Truckee and Reno.

Similar reports come from Spring Garden, Chilcoot, Portia, Gerlach and Cheyenne.

Spokane, Wash., reports trains buried under fifteen feet of snow and small hope of digging out the imprisoned men and women passengers for another day at least.

BROCKTON, Jan. 14.—Lured to his city by glowing word pictures of its beauty and prosperity Mary Robbins of Yarmouth, aged seventeen, pleaded guilty to being a runaway in the Police Court to-day and was allowed to go home with her father, S. E. Robbins. In police court, Miss Robbins told of being repeatedly asked to come here to live by Frank Sherman, a campello youth. She said young Sherman asked her to marry him as soon as she got here.

SURE OF PART OF $23,000,000

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 14—The wife of Carence Johnston, who inherits a share of a $23,000,000 estate, declares she will have the tools he which her husband earned a living set with diamonds and gold plated. They will be kept in a glass case in the parlor.

The Johnstons, who have three daughters and a comfortable home at No. 124 New Bridge street, are overjoyed at news which came to them through other relatives and heirs to the estate recently.

About next July Mr. Johnston says he hopes to be in possession of his share of the vast fortune left by Andrew Ferguson, his uncle. The millionaire uncle, who he supposed to have died at a ripe old age, made his home in the northern part of Ireland.

How such a vast amount of money was accumulated by his uncle, Mr. Johnston cannot explain, but he feels confident that the fortune does exist and that it is only a matter of time before he and his family will get their share.

Each member of the family is an heir according to the information gathered by Mr. Johnston. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston have three children, Helen, aged six; Madeline, aged four, and Grace, one year old, who are expected to receive about $7,000 each, and Mr. Johnston estimates that he and his wife will receive about $700,000 as their share.

"The first I knew of my inheritance was about three months ago when I received letters and papers from a lawyer in West Virginia asking me to answer several questions," says Mr. Johnston. "I did so, never expecting to get any reply, but a few days ago I received a letter which convinced me that I was one of the nearest relatives to the millionaire."

ARMED ROBBERS ROUTED BY GIRL

With a sign on the cheek and a lusty scream, Miss Mary McDonald, twenty-one, of No. 141 Everett street, Allston, put to flight three armed men who attempted to force their way into her home. The three men walked into the back yard and asked for food. When Miss McDonald refused to give them any, one of the number tried to force his way into the house. She slapped him in the face and then reached for a broom. Another of the trio drew a revolver and Miss McDonald screamed. Her uncle, Angus McPhee, who came to her assistance, was beat at bay by the revolver and the three men succeeded in making their escape. All are said to have been young men and police of Boston and Cambridge police are to-day searching for them.

MOTHER TELLS WHY SHE KILLED HER SON

Mrs. Melber Must Stand Trial for Murder for Poisoning Boy.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 14.—Mrs. Edith Melber, confessed slayer of her five-year-old son, was arraigned before Justice Chatfield to-day and ordered brought back to this city, where she must stand trial for murder in the first degree. In charge of a detective, she arrived here this afternoon.

The police are now bending their efforts to find the author whom Mrs. Melber was said to have married soon. The authorities learned to-day that a Schenectady man with whom Mrs. Melber was very friendly, left Schenectady for San Francisco about the same time Mrs. Melber disappeared. The police of Kansas City have been furnished with his description and asked to arrest him.

It is declared that Mrs. Melber was engaged to a plumber named Howard Kirk of Schenectady. She will claim that the "Georgie" was the son of her brother and that she had no children.

Boy's Uncle Is Accuser.

The direct charge was made against Mrs. Melber by Charles F. Smith, the child's uncle, that she gave rat rat to her child that she might marry again. Smith is said to have told the police of repeated alleged threats by Mrs. Melber would establish this as a motive for the murder.

"She lied to me and my family," Smith said, "when she complained that the boy was in the way."

The police are anxious to get in touch with Mrs. Melber's suitor to learn from him anything which the woman might have told him regarding her child. The authorities did not allege that this man might have guilty knowledge which would make him an accessory before the fact. The authorities have learned that the young woman had a number of admirers.

Mrs. J. F. Bartlett of Schenectady, by whom Mrs. Melber was employed, told the authorities to-day that Mrs. Melber showed dislike for the boy and beat him on several occasions.

Declared Son Was Nephew.

"Mrs. Melber brought the child to my home on several occasions, but always said he was the son of her brother," Mrs. Bartlett said. "I was surprised and indignant at the manner she treated him."

By the testimony of Mrs. Bartlett the authors hope to refute the accused woman's insanity defence.

Mrs. Melber, confessing that she had killed with poison her five-year-old son, whose body was found in a field near Schenectady, told, according to the police, an amazing story of suffering and despair.

She declared that, because she could not care for the boy, and after wandering about with him for hours until they were exhausted and starving, she decided to kill him.

Woman's Story of Killing.

Here is the woman's own story:

"My husband died from tuberculosis in Schenectady four years ago," she told Chief Quigley, "and since that time I have worked, and worked hard. I was employed by a Mrs. Bartlett in Schenectady, and I put George in the home for children there. A few weeks ago I became ill and I could not pay his board at the home. They told me I must pay or take him away, so just to keep Christmas I took him to his mother, Charles Smith, who lives in Schenectady.

"He stayed there for a while and then his uncle and aunt told me that they could keep him no longer. I went back to the home with him, but they told me that I owed for his board then and he could not stay there.

"I could not have him with me where I was working and I knew of no other place. George stayed with me Thursday night of last week, and Friday I went to Albany. I knew there was a home for children on State street, and we went there Friday afternoon. I asked them if I could leave George there and the clerk told me I would have to see the superintendent. He went out and the clerk telephoned, but he could not find him. The clerk said she had no authority to admit the boy.

Buys Candy and Poison.

"I was almost exhausted and worn out with worrying. There seemed to be no place in the world for my boy.

"We walked down the street and I stopped at a drug store and bought some chocolates for George. I also bought a bottle of carbolic acid. We had moments to go and we walked the streets until I could hardly stand. I did not know what to do. I thought and thought, but I could see no way out of my trouble.

"At last we got on a car and rode for a while. I don't remember much about that, but I know when we got off I said that we were on the road to Schenectady. There were very few houses and it was cold and dark and lonely.

"I took George's hand and we started to walk along the road. He was so young, poor little son, that he could hardly drag one foot after the other. He was crying softly, so as not to worry me and finally he asked me:

"'Mamma,' he sobbed, 'I'm awfully tired and awfully sleepy, too.'

Dies With a Sob.

"There was no place nearby where I could get a drink of water for him. Then I remembered that I had the bottle in my pocket. I had been carrying it all the time, but I had forgotten it. We left the road and went into a field.

"'Mamma,' George said, 'can't you get me a drink of water?'

"I uncorked the bottle and held it to his little mouth.

"'Here's some water, George,' I said. 'He always believed what I told him. Then drink this.'

and drank it.

"He just gave one little sound like a sort of choking sob—that was all. He must have swallowed most of it, but he was such a little fellow and the wash strong. He was very quiet, though, and I held him. Tears dripped from my arms and fell to the ground.

"I didn't cast long and I stayed with him until he was still. Then I went back to the road and went into a field. I walked back several times, but he lay there just as if he was asleep.

"I don't remember just what I did after that. I was dazed and I suppose I walked and walked, but I don't know where I went. I don't think I knew what I had done. I don't know why I did it—don't know. I was so tired of the world, of living, of everything. I had no money and there was no place for my boy. I had done the best I could since his father died, and I could not do any more."

Wanders About Streets.

The police have learned that Mrs. Melber left the Bartlett house in Schenectady Friday night and remained there until yesterday. The account of the movements of the boy's body appeared in papers Wednesday and Mrs. Melber told Mrs. Bartlett that afternoon she had received a telegram calling her to Syracuse. Mrs. Bartlett telephoned to the telegraph office and found this was untrue. She confronted Mrs. Melber, and the latter admitted the falsehood, but said she must go to Syracuse anyway.

She left the Bartlett home Thursday morning in a cab with the trunk, which led to her arrest. Detective Reed of Albany learned that she had bought a ticket to Rochester instead of Syracuse. She has a brother, James Ferguson, in Syracuse, but she did not go there.

"I know no one in Albany," she told Chief Quigley. "And I wandered about the street for hours. Then I went to the Y. W. C. A., and they gave me a room for the night. I stayed there until it was time to go to the station for my trunk."

SCHENK NURSE, CENTRE OF PLOT, TESTIFIES

proprietary and patent medicines Dr. Thornton was asked if basophilic granules such as he had discovered in the blood of John G. Schenk, could have been formed by illness.

"No, they exem from poison," said the doctor.

"From part of Schenk's anatomy did you took blood for examination?"

"The ear."

The witness was then asked as to the effects of various kinds of poison.

Doctor Confessed Error.

Upon cross-examination Dr. Thornton was made to admit that after his first diagnosis he thought Schenk merely suffering from a serious illness.

Henry Sonnenberg, a merchant, was called to testify as to gifts purchased in his store by Mrs. Schenk for Daniel Phillips.

There was a stir through the court room when Prosecuting Attorney Hanslan called for Juliette Klein.

Miss Klein, the nurse, declared to be the keystone of the prosecution, was the target for every eye in the room as she took the witness chair. Mrs. Schenk glared at her from her seat.

It was Miss Klein who swore that Mrs. Schenk had offered her money to cause her husband's death.

A terrible blow was struck at the defense by Mrs. Klein, who had nursed John O. Schenk during his illness from poison. She testified that Mrs. Schenk had said that she felt like killing her husband and suggested that the nurse give him a pill, offering her $1,000 to do so.

Nurse Was a Detective.

As soon as the witness took the stand she admitted that her real name was Elsner Zeller, and that she was a detective in the employ of a Pittsburg detective agency.

"Do you know Mrs. Schenk?" asked the prosecutor after the detective-nurse had given her story.

Mrs. Kline glanced toward Mrs. Schenk whose face had hardened as the girl took the stand.

"I do.

"For what purpose did you go to the 20th Wheeling Hospital?"

"To watch her."

The witness told of coming from Pittsburg with two other detectives and being installed in the Schenk home by the guise of a nurse and going to the hospital to watch Mrs. Schenk.

"What were your duties there," Mr. Hanslan asked.

"To leave absolutely undone in an effort to convict Mrs. Schenk giving her husband poison."

Talk With Mrs. Schenk.

"What happened the second day you were at the hospital?"

"Mrs. Schenk called me into a vacant room at the hospital for a considerable talk."

"What did she talk about?"

"Her family affairs, and then I told her Albert Schenk had given there with a paper for her husband to sign."

"What did she say?"

"She told me Albert might get his brother John to sign a will which would give the bulk of the estate to her. She told me to order Albert out of the house. She said I would have to sign anything and said she would never sign my will if I did."

"What else did she say?"

"She told me Jean is dead you get his keys in the safe deposit box. She told me that Albert would destroy them. I will swear that I took them myself if you will do this," said she."

Told Domestic Life.

"Did she say anything about her domestic life?"

"Yes, she said that she and Mr. Schenk had not been happy together since the first year."

"What happened on Sunday, October 22?"

"Mrs. Schenk came to the hospital in answer to a telephone call that her husband was worse. Mrs. Schenk took my residence and said, 'I wish to God he would die.' I asked her if she meant that and she replied, 'If you treat the life I have you would feel the same way.' She said John Schenk treated her like a dog."

Nurse Zeller told how Mrs. Schenk was the details of the poisoning of the unfortunate Schenk had told her.

"She said once when she was ill and would have died only for a doctor she refused to get up out of bed to do so. She said, 'I'll be damned if I'll get up and be a very sick woman in the house—meaning that she hated to be sick and bother.' She also said, 'If Dr. Hepp knew the life he was saving he would not be so anxious to save his life but would be glad to die.'"

Then what happened the following Tuesday?"

"I told her I had something important to tell her, and she said we could go into the country together as she wanted to get some fresh eggs. She said she couldn't leave the hospital to-day as Albert became ill and already been accused of poisoning too many people."

Nurse Confesses a Divorce.

The witness appealed to the attorneys to call her Miss Zoeckler, saying that she had been divorced from her husband, Lafayette Kline, and was trying to get away from that name. From this time on she was referred to as Miss Zoeckler.

"Did Mrs. Schenck ever say anything to you about killing her husband?"

"Yes."

"What did she say?"

"She said that what price was and I told her I might consider the proposition for $5,000."

Mrs. Schenk's face paled at this damaging assertion and she leaned forward in her chair, gripping the arms and glaring at the witness.

"What did she say to the asked Mr. Handlin.

"She replied: 'Oh, lordy, that is more than I have—say, I will make it $1,000 if you will put a pill in the water for old John. I certainly do hate that brute.'"

Smiled at a Question.

"What was the balance of the conversation?"

"I told her I would think it over."

"Did you ever talk about arsenic to Mr. Schenk's drinking water?"

"I asked Mrs. Schenk if she ever put arsenic in it, and she simply smiled.

"I told her I was watching her husband closely and she tapped me on the shoulder and exclaimed, 'Good. You are doing just fine. If John Schenk should die I would be the happiest woman in the world. Every night I pray God that I will be called up in the morning and told that he is dead.'"

The witness testified that this conversation had taken place in Mrs. Schenk's automobile after they had met clandestinely for a ride.

Continuing her story the detective-nurse said Mrs. Schenk told me there were times when he felt that she could kill her husband. I asked her why she didn't and she asked eagerly, 'Will you do it?' I replied that was another matter and then again asked me how much I would take to give him a pill. I told her that I had a mother and children to care for and the sum would have to be large and anyhow I feared I would be found out."

Asked Promise in Writing.

"Sue again offered me $1,000. I asked her for an agreement in writing to assure me of getting a part of the estate, but she declared that she would put nothing in writing at all."

"What was said about your leaving," asked the prosecutor.

"Finally Mrs. Schenk declared she would give me the $1,000, but that I should not withdraw from the case right away for fear my leaving would arouse suspicion. She said she would give me an agreement in writing covering the $1,000 on the following day, which would be November 2.

"'I will get the stuff,' said she. I asked her what she meant by stuff and she replied:

"Why, the poison, of course.' She had an impression I was on night duty and said I could administer it during the night. She gave me directions, saying: 'You can either give it to him yourself or let him take it himself. You might lay it in a stand beside the bed and he would pick it up by mistake in the darkness.'"

"On November 2 I called Mrs. Schenk on the telephone and asked her why she had not brought the pill to the hospital between 11 and 12 o'clock as she had agreed to do and she said 'there is nothing doing in that line, for I couldn't get the arsenic. She said she had let the matter over any more over the phone."

RABBI EICHLER PLEADS FOR JEWS

"The cruel treatment of the Jews of Russia is a crime against civilization and a foul blot on the fair name of Christendom," declared Rabbi M. M. Eichler in his address at the Jewish Peoples' Mass Meeting, Shaloni, Union Park street. Rabbi Eichler said: "I am not a pessimist, but for the last few years ago, in spite of their bloody history, they lived in fairly contented conditions in the present policy of relentless persecution, which has been followed by unchallenged, bloodless massacre of a whole people, not by a mob of infuriated hooligans, but by the law and his government. The so-called Russian Pale, where six million Jews are herded together, is a poisonous crime that a barbarous nation can be guilty of. Even Russian Jewish influence has its limit. To the Christian Church I appeal. Will the voice of humanity be strangled by the loud left its cohorts rolls against this bar barous insurgent of followers, and as once lifted its voice against slavery."

BOARD CONFERS ON EDDY WILL

The real Eddy will fight by directors of the Christian Science Church has begun with General Frank S. Streeter of Concord, N. H., counsel for the church, holding a conference with the board. Plans for the legal battle which has been forced by the next of kin of Mrs. Eddy were outlined and it is expected that in a short time a statement will be issued by the representatives of the church.

General Streeter's visit to Boston was unexpected, and it is said to be for the sole purpose of taking up with the board to exact course to be pursued. He is registered at the Union Club and will remain until the whole thing has been gone over.

None of the board of directors would authorize a statement as to the general course in the courts that the church would adopt in order to settle fairly unto the the $2,000,000 which Mrs. Eddy willed the church. That the board will fight to the end was assured by one of the interested ones to-day.

MAYOR SMILES AT MRS. DUFF

Mayor Fitzgerald doesn't care a snap whether Mrs. Julia E. Duff introduces one bill to make his recall easier, or a dozen.

His honor is too polite to phrase it very openly. "I shall make no comment at all," said the Mayor. "I want to pay all the respect that is due to womankind." And with that the Mayor smiled.

Mrs. Duff, in her petition, says the Mayor has defied the citizens of Boston and has done other acts that savor of lawlessness and an utter disregard of the proprieties of his high office. She also declares that it is difficult, if not impossible, to preserve the high standard of civic righteousness necessary for the proper education of the 50,000 boys in Boston's public schools.

The full text of Mrs. Duff's petition and bill follows:

By Julia E. Duff.

The undersigned, a citizen of Boston, respectfully petitions for the passage of the accompanying bill, or other suitable legislation, looking to the recall of the Mayor of the city of Boston, in view of his defiance to the people of Boston issued in the public press of January 12, 1911, and other acts of the present Mayor of the city of Boston, savoring of lawlessness and utter disregard of the proprieties of his office and of the principles of democracy; thereby making it difficult, if not impossible, to preserve the high standard of civic righteousness necessary for the proper education of more than 50,000 boys in the public schools of Boston.

"AN ACT.

Section 1—Be it enacted that

If at the State election on the subject of the recall of the Mayor of the city of Boston 30,000 or more votes be cast in the affirmative on the question, "Shall the Mayor be recalled?" there shall be a new election for Mayor at the following city election.

Section 2—All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

MISS KATHARINE AYER.

BRILLIANT DEBUT FOR MISS AYER

For the coming-out ball of Miss M. Katherine Ayer, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Ayer, the ballroom of the Somerset was massed in Killarney roses in panel effect, with the windows and balcades portiered in greenery. Miss Ayer received with her mother, who was beautifully gowned in tapestry blue mirror velvet and corsage drape of satin in the same hue, and she wore a diamond tiara in triple crescent design. The gown was in admirable contrast to the soft clinging gown of palest pink charmeuse worn by the fair debutante. The foundation robe of the latter was banded in silver grecque ribbon which prettily glinted through the tunic of chiffon fringed in crystals, which also formed the sleeve effects.

HOW DECIES, 45 WON MISS GOULD

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Not a bit out of the ordinary and all very natural and most charming, was the courtship of John Hope Horsley Beresford, Baron Decies in the British peerage, forty-five, and Miss Vivien Gould, seventeen, daughter of George J. Gould and not "out" in society.

Baron Decies, who has a long record of service in the British army and in a variety of those wars, lifted his eyebrows in surprise when asked on his arrival here just how he happened to catch young Miss Gould's heart.

How It Happened.

"How did I win her? My dear man, what an extraordinary question—upon my life, you Americans are most astonishing. Quite in the ordinary way, I make bold to agree. It was my first courtship, you know. We met in the ordinary manner, and I cannot recall that there was anything unusual about our early conversations.

"I came over to your horse show. I like horses, and so does she, and that established a bond. Then I told her about the 'shows' I had been in South Africa and India ('show' is the slang term among British army officers for war), and she interested her. Rather like Othello and Desdemona? Well, perhaps, but that's a bit flattering to me.

"That's all I can think of. I had no especial method of courtship, and it was all most natural—er—charming—yes, most charming."

A guarded intimation that the world might wonder at the disparity in age between the Irish peer and the heiress to the Gould millions, netted his lordship:

"Me old? It's all nonsense. Why in England a man, especially if he had led an outdoor life, as fellows of my sort do, is regarded as young at fifty. Suppose Miss Gould is seventeen? What of it?

"What is all this dashed row about, anyway? I never knew such a pother over an ordinary engagement. It's most extraordinary. I don't see that it's any of the public's business how old I am, or how old my fiancee is. It's nobody's business.

Honeymoon in Florida.

"In London society marriages of young women of that age with men of twice their years are everyday occurrences. It doesn't seem at all out of the ordinary to me, and I think that as long as Miss Gould is pleased—and Mrs. Gould, I might add—nobody else need be annoyed."

The Baron is over here to aid the Goulds in arranging the plans for the wedding, which is expected to take place soon. It is understood the honeymoon will be spent in Florida and perhaps a Western trip will follow. They will have to be in London in June for the coronation of King George, and for the presentation of the new Lady Decies at Court. She will have a prominent place in the procession of peeresses in Westminster Abbey during the coronation ceremonies.

HOBBLE SKIRT? NEVER AGAIN! SAYS GIRL

WILKESBARRE, Jan. 14.—Twice deeply humiliated by a hobble skirt, Miss Annie Berkowitz today caused the arrest of George Casco, a tailor, who had sold her the skirt. Miss Berkowitz ordered one of the latest patterns from Casco, but it created attention and she was pleased. But she grew tired taking short steps. It ripped and started to board a street car to go home. As she stepped vigorously upward for the high step of the car the skirt split up one side. She returned the skirt to Casco, demanding a refund on it. The first day she wore it she was caught in a rainstorm and the wet cloth transform-d into something like a kilt. To day she caused his office to collect another skirt, and Alderman Donohue gave her judgment for $25.

LAW ROBS WILEY OF WEDDING GIFT

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—As Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry and pure food expert for the nation, is soon to marry, admirers here recently began to collect money to buy him a wedding present. The plan went well until the collectors called upon Clerk, chief clerk of the bureau. He threw his hands up: "Do you want to get Dr. Wiley fired?" he said. "If you attempt to take up any subscriptions for the benefit of your superiors you are breaking the law and subject not only yourselves but the man in question to instant dismissal." So Dr. Wiley will have to go without the proposed silver dining service.

WILSON WEDS BOSTON GIRL DAY HE SAILS

NEWPORT, Jan. 14.—Charles H. Wilson's marriage to Miss Jane Dodunaly of East Boston will take place January 21, just before they board the steamer for Europe, if Wilson's present plans do not fail. He frustrated a plot to-day after returning from Boston. He refused to give any hint of where the ceremony would take place.

Wilson returned from Boston accompanied by Howard Brown of Boston who, with Mrs. Brown, will soon sail for Europe, and who will be among the few people to witness the marriage of Wilson and Miss Delehanty other than relatives.

GIRLS AFRAID HASH WILL SCARE SUITORS

ATLANTIC CITY, Jan. 14.—Girl members of the domestic sciencie class of the Atlantic City High School are pouting over the announcement that they will be forced, among other things, to learn how to make hash.

The first lesson is scheduled for next week, and the girls fear that public announcement of their proficiency in hashmaking may scare off possible suitors among young men who are forced to indulge in that boarding house staple too often during their bachelorhood.

WIFE OF PRESIDENT OF TUFTS IS DEAD

Mrs. Florence Quisard Hamilton, wife of President Frederick W. Hamilton of Tufts College, is dead at her home in Medford. She had been ill for a year. On January 7 she lapsed from consciousness, and she had been gradually sinking since that time. Mrs. Hamilton was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Mead. She was born in Jersey City in 1859, and married President Hamilton in Portland, Me., in 1884. She is survived by her mother, husband and one son, Guy C. Hamilton.

'COLLEJ GIRLS SPEL AL RITE'

Andrew Carnegie has come out in defense of the girls at Wellesley who were criticised publicly for misspelling. Mr. Carnegie declares that they probably were naturally to phonetic spelling and that they are not to be blamed for it. This is what he says:

"These young ladies were no doubt taught first that 'thoug' was pronounced 'tho,' with spelling in brackets to give the pronunciation; 'physics,' pronounced fiziks; 'taught,' pronounced taut, etc. Having become accustomed to this natural way, no wonder it is difficult for them to spell these words as they are still pronounced. They are to be complimented upon this, and if they continue their spelling as now is pronounce. They will soon become our language.

"When 'The Tale of a Tub' was printed 'spite' was printed 'spight.' We have changed that."

FRENCH FASHION "DECREES THAT RATS AND PUFFS" MUST GO

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Passengers arriving on the French line steamship La Provence today declared that fashion's decree abroad is "the rats and puffs" must go. "Within six weeks," said a prominent Fifth avenue modiste, "women will be parting their hair in the middle, smoothing it down straight and rolling it up in a large coil at the back of the neck. This is what we call the Hollandaise and Flemish style. Dresses are also to undergo a radical change within a short time. The style portrayed in the famous picture of Mme. Recamier is to be adopted. The bodices will be short, and the whole gown will have the empire effect."

PEABODY UNDER KNIFE; BETTER

BALTIMORE, Jan. 14.—With his fiancee, Miss Edith Dixon, almost constantly at his bedside, George Lee Peabody, the young Boston banker, is recovering from an operation, which was performed on him at the Johns Hopkins Hospital yesterday by Dr. Harvey Cushing, an eminent surgeon, for a mysterious growth in his head.

Dr. Cushing says he believes that the operation will permanently rid Mr. Peabody of the severe pains he suffered for several months and that a full cure will be effected. Today Mr. Peabody's condition is said to be improved.

The decision which Miss Dixon has shown Mr. Peabody since his arrival at the hospital a few days ago causes the most favorable comment among the physicians and attendants. She has apartments in the hospital near those of Mr. Peabody and remains with him until compelled to seek a few hours' rest.

WEBB SECRET INQUEST ENDS

The secret inquest into the death of Pauline Webb, the Waltham watch factory girl, who died mysteriously two weeks ago today, has been concluded before Judge Lane in the police court in Waltham. Medical Examiner George L. West was the last witness. Judge Lane will give out a statement later of his findings.

After coming from the courtroom Dr. West made this statement:

"The public has no interest in the case of Pauline Webb. There were obscure medical symptoms in the case and it was almost impossible to make a correct and proper diagnosis."

Miss Webb is believed by some to have died from an overdose of an opiate. She left her work in the watch factory Dec. 31, Thursday before she died. She was attended by the company's nurse who left several opiates for her to take. Saturday she was found unconscious in her room and died a short time after.

REPUBLICANS WAGE FIGHT AGAINST LODGE

The Central Labor Union of New Bedford has instructed the Representatives endorsed by it to vote against the re-election of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. These explicit instructions are for Senator Ross and Representatives Doyle, Lewin and Purcell. Three are Republicans and one a Democrat.

The Democratic City Committee of Holyoke has instructed the Senator and Representatives from there to vote against Lodge. One of the Representatives is Thomas McCullough, claimed by the Lodge leaders, and the claim is not denied by McCullough.

The meeting of the so-called "Fair Play Committee" of Republican members of the Legislature, in which it was sought to beat Lodge, turned out in reality an anti-Lodge gathering. Representative Fred P. Greenwood of Everett declared that this district, which is strong Republican, would not stand for Lodge.

It has been figured by the Boston Common that at the last State election there was a popular majority of 36,550 votes cast against Lodge.

The vote taken in the United States Senate yesterday was of such a character that showed without a doubt that the people will soon be able through proper legislation to vote directly for their United States Senators. This contest over Lodge is the last one that Massachusetts will ever witness of a Boss-ridden Legislature being whipped into line against it will to send a man to the Senate whom the people do not want.

WATCH THESE DEMOCRATS!

REP. WM. L. V. NEWTON REP. JAS. H. McINERNEY REP. THOS. McCULLOUGH

How do you, Mr. Democratic Voter, like to see a LODGE collar on men you voted for as Democrats? Sublime spectacle, is it not?

How did Lodge manage to get control of these men? What did he really do for them? There's a reason somewhere. What is it? Who knows?

MAJORITY VOTE AGAINST LODGE

A popular majority of 36,550 votes against Henry Cabot Lodge was cast at the last State election, according to a careful study of the official returns made by the staff of the Boston Common.

A comparison of the official returns made by the AMERICAN a few days after the election revealed a large popular majority against Lodge. This was questioned by the Republican managers, who claimed that the popular vote as indicated by the success or defeat of candidates known to be for or against the senior Senator showed a popular vote of confidence in him.

Now comes an absolutely unbiased and non-partisan study of the returns, which shows conclusively that Senator Lodge was one of the important issues in the State campaign and that the people by a majority of almost 37,000 votes repudiated him as their representative in Washington.

Prefacing its comparison of the returns, the Boston Common says:

What the Common Says.

A careful revision of the returns of votes cast in the representative districts has been made by the staff of the Boston Common, to ascertain as nearly as possible the number of persons voting for supposed Lodge Republican candidates for the House and for supposed anti-Lodge candidates, including in the latter number all Democratic candidates together with such Republican candidates as, in the personal knowledge of the Boston Common representative, were supposed in their respective districts, before election, to prefer some other candidate. To ascertain the approximate number of persons voting in the two-representative and three-representative districts, the average number of votes cast for the Republican candidates was taken as the total Republican vote, and the total Democratic vote was obtained in the same way in districts where one Republican and one Democrat were elected, the vote cast for each was assumed to be the party vote.

The Figures Analyzed.

On this basis, the figures obtained are as follows:

	Voters
Supposed Lodge Republicans elected by	117,678
Supposed anti-Lodge Republicans elected by	22,834
Republicans defeated (voted for 99)	57,322
Total number voting for Republican members	197,834
Democrats elected by	123,215
Democrats defeated (voted for 93)	76,510
Total number voting for Democrats	201,725
Total number voting for Democrats	201,725
Total number voting for Republicans	197,834
Popular Plurality for Democrats	3,891
Total number voting for supposed anti-Lodge men	224,559
Total number voting for supposed Lodge men	175,009
Popular anti-Lodge Plurality	49,550

Not Political Investigation.

On this showing the total number of persons voting for Representatives was 399,559, which corresponds closely with the vote cast for Senator, even with discounting the fact that in a considerable number of the districts only one party ticket was in the field.

Frederick T. Fuller of the Common staff, who made the investigation, states that it was undertaken by the Common without any consultation with or with the knowledge of any one connected with the Lodge campaign organization, and that it was made simply as the basis for a special article in the Common.

GREATEST SEA FIGHTER FLOATS

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 14.—Uncle Sam's navy was to-day increased by the addition of the most powerful fighting vessel in the world, when Miss Mary L. Macon, daughter of Congressman Macon of Arkansas, broke a bottle of champagne over the bow of the new battleship named for that State, and sent it gliding gracefully down the ways to the broad surface of the Delaware at the yards of the New York Shipbuilding Company in this city.

On the stand with Miss Macon were high officials of the Navy Department and officers of all grades resplendent in their uniforms of blue and gold lace, as well as a sprinkling of Washington and Philadelphia society. Owing to the hurried arrangements made for the launching, the State of Arkansas was not officially represented.

The new battleship is the most powerful in the world, having a displacement of 26,000 tons, the next in size being four battleships of the British navy—the Conqueror, Monarch, Orion and Thunderer—each of which had a displacement of 22,500 tons.

TELL DEMOCRAT TO OPPOSE LODGE

WALKER HAS A "DIRECT" BILL

HOLYOKE, Jan. 14.—The Democratic City Committee of Holyoke has voted unanimously to instruct Thomas F. McCullough, elected to the House of Representatives from Holyoke, to vote against the election of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge.

The emphatic instructions of the committee are that the Senator and all of the representatives from here vote against Lodge. But the resolution, it is understood, is chiefly aimed at McCullough, who is claimed by the Lodge managers.

The eyes of the Democrats of Holyoke are on McCullough and if he supports Lodge he is deemed politically dead.

Here are the men who were instructed to vote against Lodge in letters sent to them to-day:

Senator Francis X. Quigley.
Representative Thomas F. McCullough.
Representative George R. Burne.
Representative Thomas Doyle.

The meeting of the Democratic City Committee was called as a result of the stand that McCullough has taken in the senatorial matter. The officials of the party were amazed when they learned that the Lodge managers were counting on the vote of McCullough and that McCullough did not deny that he was for Lodge.

McCullough was elected because he said he stood on the Democratic platform, one of the planks of which expressly pledged that all candidates would, if elected, vote against Lodge.

The meeting of the committee was a determined one and there was not a dissenting voice when it came to voting the instructions to the four men elected as Democrats, and many of the Republicans in this section want Lodge defeated.

MAYOR URGES MORE WORK AT NAVY YARD

Mayor Fitzgerald in addressing 500 Navy Yard employees in Hingham Hall, in this town, urged that more work be secured for the local yard, and he pledged his support to any movement toward that end. Congressman Frederick H. Murray, another speaker, declared that the yard was not given a chance. "It seems to be high time for a recognition of our claims," said Mr. Murray. "The Brooklyn Navy Yard has been much favored in the building of battleships and special bills have passed through Congress providing for an increase in the original estimates for work to be done there."

National President George L. Cain presided, and addresses were made by Dr. Francis P. Sites, representing the Charlestown Business Men's Association, and A. A. Fales of the Charlestown Improvement Association.

Declaring that, as a candidate for Governor next Fall, he wishes to appeal to the rank and file of the Republican party, Speaker Walker today filed a bill with the clerk of the House providing for the direct nomination of candidates for Governor and other State officers.

Although his bill does not include Congressmen and county officers, the Speaker declares, in a statement which he issues explaining his bill, that he is in favor of it and will support only for the final nomination of all officers not included in his bill.

The bill provides also for a State convention for each party, to be composed in part of State delegates and all the nominees of the party, together with the United States Senators, if any, belonging to the party, to frame and promulgate the party platform and to elect a State committee.

Blow at "Packed" Caucuses.

Another important provision in the Speaker's bill is aimed at the "packing" of party caucuses with members of another party. It provides that no person having taken part in the caucus of one political party shall take part in the caucus of another political party, unless the town or city or town clerk or election commissioner, at least thirty days before the date of the caucus, a statement that he intends to do so. The fee not exceeding $50 and imprisonment for not more than five days is provided as a penalty for violation.

The statement of Mr. Walker follows:

"I do not have interest enough at this time an argument in favor of direct nominations. Nine-tenths of the people of this Commonwealth favor it, nine-tenths today and the other tenth will believe in it as soon as they understand it.

"This bill does not weaken legitimate party activity. It puts strength into it. It provides a simple and direct method for the rank and file to express and impress their preference for party candidates. It makes effective and immensely strengthens the vote of the independent citizen, who earnestly desires good government, but who is strong enough in the present system is often defeated by the manipulations of party managers.

"It provides for a convention composed in part of State delegates and in part of those freshly chosen by the people to make candidates for office. It provides that those may take part in making the party platform who are to stand upon it. It provides that those may take part in selecting the State committee whose election the party convention is to promulgate. It brings together and unites for the campaign all those who have an active and common interest in the campaign.

New Life in the Party.

"All this tends to put new life into the legitimate party organization and to give such organization in close touch with the people. I believe in this bill and I shall advocate it with enthusiasm.

"In this bill I deal with those officers only whom I have mentioned. I wish to add that I believe strongly in the direct nomination of congressmen, county commissioners, and all minor officers, and I shall support such bills, as may be put in, to extend the direct nomination system to such officers.

"I am convinced that the requirement of a petition in the direct nomination bill of last year for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor was a mistake and caused much delay and inconvenience without accomplishing any good. This restriction should be abolished.

Has a Personal Interest.

"Now, in conclusion, I wish to state that those who are opposed to the system of direct nominations will attempt to postpone the operation of the bill which I submit by attaching a referendum to it. Next Fall there will be several candidates for the offices of governor and of lieutenant-governor and perhaps for other offices.

"If we ever need a direct nomination law to prevent secret trades and agreements, and the manipulation of delegates designed to defeat the will of the people in the choice of their candidates, it will be next year.

"I know it will be said that I have a personal interest in this matter. I have, but my personal interest is to give the rank and file of the party an opportunity to express itself. I am willing to be guided by their decision and all other candidates ought to be."

LABOR OUT TO DEFEAT LODGE

Resolved—That the Central Labor Union of New Bedford, representing the declared sentiment of its affiliated unions in this city, hereby instructs those members of the Legislature indorsed by it as candidates for election, to cast their ballots against Henry Cabot Lodge when the vote for United States Senator is taken.

Reports have been heard of various deals by which votes are to be cast for Senator Lodge. We declare that it would be a shame for any representative of union labor or elected by union labor votes to vote for him.

Resolved—That the Central Labor Union will watch with close interest the vote for United States Senator.

NEW BEDFORD, Jan. 4.—Labor labor has taken a hand in the campaign against the re-election of Senator Lodge and now in no uncertain tones at the meeting of the Central Labor Union here last evening. Resolutions instructing the labor delegates and one Democratic member of the Legislature indorsed by the C. L. U., who were candidates, to vote against Lodge, were unanimously adopted.

If these legislators follow the instructions, the defeat of Lodge is clinched.

They have been counted as favoring Lodge and have been claimed by the Lodge managers. Two of them stated a few days after election that there were in favor of Lodge, one was doubtful and the other was not voted.

The AMERICAN'S canvass of the Legislature a week ago showed that the senior Senator lacked nine of the 141 votes necessary to elect him on joint ballot. Here are at least two more against him from the Labor Union candidates for the House from New Bedford, who were elected by Labor Union votes, refuse to obey the plain and unmistakable instructions given them by the Central Labor Union last night.

The four Representatives thus instructed are:

SENATOR SAMUEL ROSS, Republican official of Spinners' Union.
REPRESENTATIVE ANDREW P. DOYLE, Republican, member of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union.
REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES LEWIN, Republican, member of the Loom Fixers' Union.
REPRESENTATIVE ANDREW J. PURCELL, Democrat, member of the Loom Fixers' Union.

The resolutions were adopted at the regular meeting of the Central Labor Union, the election of officers being a feature of the gathering. It was the most largely attended meeting in years, the union honor in this city is intensely interested in the defeat of Lodge, and it was known that the Senatorial election would be discussed. The resolutions, unanimously adopted, are as follows:

"Resolved, That the Central Labor Union of New Bedford, representing the declared sentiments of its affiliated unions of this city hereby instructs those members of the Legislature, indorsed by it as candidates for election, to cast their ballots against Henry Cabot Lodge when the vote for United States Senator is taken.

"Reports have been heard of various deals by which votes are to be delivered for Senator Lodge. We declare that it would be a shame for any representative of union labor or elected by labor union votes, to vote for him.

"Resolved, That the Central Labor Union will watch with close interest the vote for United States Senator."

All Denounce Lodge.

Anti-Lodge sentiment was unanimous at the meeting. All the speakers were outspoken against the re-election of the senior Senator and they did not mince their words in speaking or him nor of some of the methods adopted by his campaign managers.

None of the legislators from New Bedford were present at the meeting but copies of the resolutions will be received by them to-day.

The New Bedford delegation to the Legislature also includes Edward H. Methiway of the representatives from the Eighth Bristol district, but as he was not indorsed by the Central Labor Union before election, no copy of the resolutions will be sent to him. He is an out and out Lodge man.

In his reply to a Boston newspaper, which canvassed the candidates-elect a couple of days after the State election, Representative Lewin of the Seventh Bristol district was quoted as follows:

Lewin's First Statement.

"Tell them to mind their own d——n business. That's answer enough for it. I don't care anything about a caucus. I will cast my vote in the interest of the working people of my district so far as I am able to ascertain their interests. That's all the answer I am giving to those inquisitive gentlemen who want to know what I am going to do before I do it. The people have trusted me to do what I think fit to the best of my knowledge."

WHERE DO THESE THREE STAND?

Here are the three Democrats who were elected to the House as Democrats on a Democratic platform, but who are classed as Lodge men by the senior Senator's friends. These men themselves say they "don't know."

The Democratic caucus will take place next Monday afternoon. It is absolutely necessary that the constituents of these three men should watch them from now until then, and until a United States Senator is chosen by the legislature. Democrats from all over the State declare that these three men cannot vote for Lodge if they are true Democrats.

Let the People Act.

Why won't these three men tell who they are going to vote for for United States Senator? It is because they are pledged to Senator Lodge and don't dare to say so? Their constituents should urge all of them to attend the Democratic caucus next Monday. They should go with the other Democrats and support some progressive man against Senator Lodge.

There is a plank in the Democratic platform that pledges all Democratic legislators to vote against Lodge. How can Attorney McCullough and Newton vote for him and still claim they are Democrats? How senator Lodge may regular him on Representative McInerney and Newton? If he has the people should find it out between now and next Monday.

That readers of the AMERICAN appreciate the fight this paper is making against Senator Lodge is evidenced by the fact that hundreds of letters of inquiry have been received. The following is one of them:

Letter from L. H. Bonelli, Jr.

Editor AMERICAN:

Your article on the first page of last night's AMERICAN relative to the democratic members of the State Legislature who are on the fence in regard to the election of United States Senator, being presumably Lodge men, were read with interest by me. I hope you will keep persistently after the democratic members of the League from now until next Tuesday. Improving upon them in every way that it be their duty to vote against Lodge.

It strikes me that persistency will have its reward. It did in the case of Harris, who, from 1904 to 1910 persistently kept in politics in spite of being officially read out of both parties. I hope that you will persevere until the Republican representatives that next Fall the voters will have some guidance as to who should be elected. It might be well to impress upon the Democratic men that perhaps they have political ambitions, also. Yours with best wishes for persistency and success in the campaign against Lodge.

LOUIS H. BONELLI, JR.

FIRE CAPTAIN CRIBBY SUSPENDED BY RICH

Chief Engineer Sewall M. Rich of the Somerville fire department, following a conference with Mayor Burns, suspended Joseph A. Crisby, district chief and captain of engine company No. 6, for not giving an alarm on a $2,500 fire Thursday night, after a shock of it was discovered in Woodbury's grocery store in Cliff's block on Medford street, near Union square, Somerville, which is only a stone's throw from the quarters of engine 6. The fire started two hours after the store was closed and had gained great headway when discovered by a citizen, who notified Captain Cribby. The latter immediately summoned his company with a still alarm and fought the fire with the company's combination chemical and hose wagon. The steam fire engine was not taken out of the house.

THACHER QUITS FIGHT ON HARRIS

Thomas C. Thacher, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Fourteenth District last Fall, in a statement issued today, announces that he has abandoned his contest of the election of Judge Robert O. Harris, who defeated him.

In his statement Mr. Thacher says:

I feel that justice alike to the people who supported me, to my late opponent, and to my friends and myself, demands that I state fully my position on the contested election question and why I have decided to abandon such contest.

At the recounts in the district my opponent gained four votes, while I gained ninety-three. I found out at these recounts that a large number of ballots apparently in my favor had not been counted for me, while on the other hand a large number of ballots had, in my opinion, been improperly counted for my opponent. The total number of these ballots which I claimed was eighty-one. A still more serious condition of affairs was revealed. Many grave irregularities had taken place in certain towns.

I find it possible that in case of this kind may not be settled before the Spring of 1912, thus giving me, if successful, only a few days to serve in the Spring, and two months and a half of actual service in the Winter of 1912-13. Meanwhile, an atmosphere of uncertainty must of necessity hang over the heads of my late opponent and myself, while there would be considerable expense of time and money to us both, and also to the House of Representatives, in such a contest. In this uncertainty I should find it difficult to make any plans and prepare myself for what I desire. For these and many other good and sufficient reasons I have decided to abandon the contest.

I wish to say positively that I do not believe for a moment that Judge Harris was cognizant of the many unlawful things committed in the Fourteenth District, nor do I believe for a moment that he would countenance such methods.

I hold Judge Harris in high respect and esteem.

I am glad that the Fourteenth Congressional District is sending such a good man to Washington, and he has my best wishes for a happy and successful service in the Sixty-second Congress. I herewith offer Judge Harris my sincere and most hearty congratulations.

BIG ATTENDANCE TO END OF AUTO SHOW

By J. C. KERRISON.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Although this is getaway day at the motor show in Madison Square Garden, the interest, that from the visitors' and the dealers' point of view, is maintained at fever heat. There seems to be no diminution in the attendance, or in the amount of interest displayed by the visitors in the several models. Taken all in all, the show about to be closed has proven one of the most successful in the history of the industry, and really marks the turning point in the same. It is generally conceded that hereafter there will be no dividing line between the manufacturers, which have heretofore been divided into two classes—licensed and independent, the result of the Selden Patent having eliminated all those things.

One of the most extensive exhibits of pleasure cars is that made by the Autocar Company, which is showing three cars and one chassis, and the new pleasure car is graceful in its lines and possesses some high grade features which are expected to earn popular approval. The detachable fore-door is one of the devices that has been well worked out. This is shown on the touring car models and is designed to interest those who see the value of the convertibility should the days grow hot in Summer. The cars are shown fully equipped with tops, extra wheels and other accessories. This feature of complete equipment with every car is part of the Autocar selling policy.

Garford's Showing.

The Garford Company, after having manufactured cars for other people for the past seven years, is shown under its own name this year and makes a most attractive and impressive appearance. The Garford is shown in touring car style for five and seven passengers and also in the limousine. Mr. Charles Swain Wisconsin, this city, has charge of the exhibit and is doing most excellent work.

The motor is a four-cylinder, cylinders cast in pairs. Ignition is by low tension Bosch magneto, with magneto spark plugs in connection with a Bosch sear starting device. Three years' use of the magneto ping on the Garford chassis has convinced the makers of its worth. The carburetor is a Venturi type in combination with float feed and auxiliary air inlet.

Ordinarily other engines in this size, it is said, seldom deliver as much as forty horse-power, and elaborate tests were made with the carburetor to make sure that no peculiarity of it could restrict the power of the motor at 400 possible overloads. The motor has developed as high as 47½ horse-power on the brake test. The clutch is a very light cast aluminum leather face cone, with cork inserts and flat springs.

There are nine models of the American cars for 1911. The changes from the past season's models are few, and those, following the general line of this year, are merely refinements in detail. The nine models offered this year are the Roadster, Roadster Coupe, Roadster Special, Traveler, Traveler Coupe, Traveler Special, Speedster, Tourist and Limousine. In seven of these models the American is underslung. For the underslung frame is claimed greater safety in rounding corners and because of the low centre of gravity a straight line drive, conserving engine energy. F. C. Crisenbery of the Boston agency has been in constant attendance.

Six Jackson Models.

The tenth year of making Jackson cars shows six models. These cars range in price from $1,100 to $2,200. A feature of the 1911 cars of the Jackson make is the convertible torpedo body. Removable front doors complete with sills and panels are provided and fitted to the standard touring body at a slight extra cost. In the city, where front doors is an advantage, the ordinary touring car body may be used. For country touring during the Fall and Winter, or even in the city very often in those seasons, the closed in body is most convenient. The wheel base is increased from 120 to 130 inches this year, an increase of four inches over 1910. There are new multiple disk clutch, larger steering wheel, improved brakes and an increase in power and speed.

The new bodies have increased room in the tonneau and the front seat accommodates but one person. The touring and roadster models of the Moon are a fore-door car with a large amount of equipment and a 30 inside drive coupe. The toy tonneau is a $1,500 car, and then there are some more expensive models in the 45. The 45 fore-door, designed for five and seven passengers, sells at $3,100, which is also the price of the torpedo.

Three models represent the Mitchell line this year—model R, model T and model S—and the executives of the Racine, Wisconsin, plant, where nearly 3,000 automobiles for delivery during the period covered by this line are being turned out, believe that they have correctly diagnosed the conditions of the industry, the needs of the Mitchell type of cars and the legitimate absorbing power of the market.

Lozier Catalogue Beauty.

The 1911 Lozier catalog is a thing of beauty. The solidity of the Lozier product is seen in the catalog. Lozier pages not has always been of the solid and dependable kind—this was true of the Lozier bicycle, and it is also true of the Lozier automobile. Some years ago, the Lozier bicycle was considered the highest product of the bicycle maker's art.

In the Haynes exhibit are found four complete cars in the new model Y, 6070 of the car is the new model Y, 6070 horsepower car, designed to hold seven passengers. The others, including the chassis, are of model D. The complete cars are fore-door machines.

There is a very considerable exhibit of Oakland cars. Besides five complete cars there is a polished chassis and a sectional motor. Two cars that have not been seen before are K Special and the model 34, both of them new productions for this season. Model K and the special in this line are forty horsepower machines. They have cylinders 4½ inch bore and five inch stroke. There is a carburetor of Oakland special design.

The Simplex, built in New York city, has three powers of car, the thirty-eight, with shaft drive, and the forty and ninety horse-power, which have double chain drive. The Simplex cars are displayed in space 218 on the balcony. The thirty-eight is a new model, exhibited for the first time at this show. The motor is of a vertical type, four cylinders, with inlet and exhaust valves on opposite sides. Care has been taken to place the moving parts and bearings from dust and to keep the lubricating oil from leaking out.

GALVIN SCORES 'L' CONDITIONS

Dr. George W. Galvin, M. D., of No 194 Huntington avenue, has sent the following important letter to the AMERICAN:

"The discussion at the Twentieth Century Club on the unsanitary conditions of our surface and elevated cars, in which the Hon. Mr. Herlihy scored the Public Service Corporation, revealed nothing new to victims compelled to patronize the Boston Elevated Railroad. The sexual perverted notions towards women passengers often compel male commuters to interfere and extend their protection toward these defenceless women. To assault one of these degenerates means a trip to the station house, followed by a morbid mob of semi-civilized men and women, a loss of time in court, ensuing inconvenience and expense as well as disagreeable publicity from which all self-respecting women shrink.

"The danger from acquiring contagious and infectious diseases is more than in the past, since the railroad corporation reduced the number of cars and will continue to reduce so long as the suffering and abused public refuse to protest and demand their rights.

Strap Hangers' League.

"A Strap Hangers' League, whose slogan should be, 'No seat, no fare,' would remove both evils (dirt and disease and polluted air). Here's an opportunity for every member of the Twentieth Century Club to do something practical. It is composed of a large, influential and wealthy body of supposedly public-spirited citizens, and most of its members could afford the time and expense of going to court. They signaled the Rev. Dr. Lee's clarion call!

"Now, members of the Twentieth Century Club, get busy. Show your sincerity, or you will never have a better opportunity or easier task to do something practical. You alone can correct these two evils. It will be months before members of the Legislature will give you a hearing. Just remember the railroad owns that august body and your efforts will be futile. At the same time you should consider another suggestion beneficial to the human race.

Says Subways Are Too Cold.

"Early this morning and at 9 p. m. I waited the usual time at Park street station. Let us consider conditions at the news stands at either entrance. Park street typifies all of them. I made my usual purchase of newspapers and magazines from two of the girls who stand for ten and twelve hours a day, chilled to the marrow, in a cross, freezing draught blowing from Park to Boylston street. Their hands are covered with dust and dirt from dusty air and ink of papers and magazines, resulting in hard, horrifying calluses. Their faces were pinched, of crimson cold, their eyes watery and bodies shrunken under sweaters, giving them the appearance of consumptives instead of cheerful girls just budding into womanhood. A small outlay of money would protect them from tuberculous-laden air, and heat could be provided for lower limbs and hands. Indifference of 95 per cent. of the traveling public compels 5 per cent. to do all the protesting, and the 5 per cent. soon become known as public agitators, and in the minds of some public nuisances.

Women Forced to Stand.

"Lawyer Brandeis's proposition could stimulate the cost of railroads a million a year, but the adoption would be a solar plexus blow to a few capitalists. He knows that we in Boston have enough subways and elevated surface cars and that rush hours can be relegated to the past by shortening the hours of labor, thus preventing all wage-workers being compelled to go and come at the same time. To be sure, all industries would have to be in the working ranks, which would lessen the profits of employers, and they would shriek, 'where are our profits?'

"By the way if we insist on the profits of labor without breeding a degenerate race, get out of the way and give the workers an opportunity to control human page public utilities.

"To go back to over-crowding of the cars: it is a crime that women soon to become mothers and others suffering from abdominal diseases—the latter on their way to hospitals or physicians' offices—should be hustled and hurtled by the unsympathetic crowds."

TOLSTOI'S HOME TO BE FARM SCHOOL

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Michael Kostinitsky, a nephew of the late Count Tolstoi, who came here from Russia delays ago to try and find a purchaser for is uncle's estate, has announced that charles R. Flint proposes to take the property under certain conditions. Negotiations had been begun with Andrew Carnegie to take over the estate, but Mr. Carnegie declined, on the ground that Russia was a long way from New York, and that all his work would be taken up by his $10,000,000 universal peace gift.

"The proposal made to Mr. Carnegie," said Mr. Kostinitsky, "was that the estate should be set aside as forming an educational settlement, in accordance with the views often expressed by Count Tolstoi, and the remaining 600 acres utilized in any manner subject to the approval of the Russian government.

"Mr. Flint has made an offer to purchase the estate on condition that the 150 acres for the Tolstoi settlement and be cost of erecting a school of agriculture, a hospital and library should be done by an international subscription fund, to which admirers of the late Count might send donations."

BIG BUSINESS AT POULTRY SHOW

The Poultry Show in Mechanics building closes to-night and will be recorded in the books of the Boston Poultry Association as the best in its fifteen years of experience in Boston. One of the largest exhibitors placed the total amount of business for early shipment at $250,000, and another declared it would be nearer $1,000,000. The value of the live stock is estimated to be more than $100,000.

The special car awards were:

Best cat in the show—King Winter, Miss Carroll Macy, New York city.

Second best cat—Argent Glorious, Mrs. F. Champion.

Best novice—Argent Glorious, Mrs. F. Champion.

Best kitten—Boy Admiral, Miss Eliza beth Fyne.

Best short hair cat—Buster Brown, Mrs. Walter MacGuinness.

Rowe's Hatchery of Groton took the blue ribbon for the best dozen brown eggs in the egg exhibit, Charles A. Wheeler & Son of Brighton being awarded the second prize. The blue for the best white eggs was awarded to M. H. Jacobus of Bridgefield, N. J., who also took the red in this class. Mr. Jacobus was awarded first and second for the whitest dozen of eggs, while J. H. Colpit of Arlington took first for the darkest colored brown eggs.

In the judging of cage birds, Charles A. Murray of Cambridge walked away with thirty first, six seconds, five thirds and three fourth prizes; Thomas Ely of Brockton was another big winner in this department. John N. Murphy of Roxbury won a number of firsts and seconds in the novice classes.

First awards were given to Rowe's Hatchery and Birch Meadow Farm for best displays of dressed poultry.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 300,000 more than its next highest competitor and 100,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

DEFY HOODOO OF FRIDAY THE 13TH AND WED AT 3:13

BROCKTON, Jan. 14.—Defying all superstitions and claiming that the double hoodoo of "13" and "Friday" could be beaten if fought in the right way John Bonaparte of No. 31 Hawthorne street was married at 13 minutes past 3 yesterday afternoon to Miss Frances Gemile of No. 211 North Warren avenue by Mayor Howard, who was celebrating his 13th day as Mayor of Brockton.

HARVARD HAS NO BOOK MONEY

Harvard is too poor to buy new books for the college library, according to an announcement in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin, which says:

"A month or more ago members of the faculty received from the library a little printed slip. It contained the brief statement that owing to lack of funds the library could buy no new books for the present, and added that all requests, unless covered by special benefactions, would have to be placed on file for some months at least.

"So far as we are aware this announcement, unwelcome though it was, evoked no protest from any quarter. The duty of the authorities are of course not to blame, for they cannot make bricks without straw. But we venture the surmise that if the announcement had informed the college world of depleted athletic exchequer and had added regretfully that all requests for the necessities of intercollegiate combat would be placed on file until a more convenient season—well, there might have been some response."

BIG WELCOME FOR BAKLANOFF

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Disguised behind a set of red whiskers and attired in the cap and bells of a jester, George Baklanoff, the baritone, came back to the Boston Opera last night.

He was instantly recognized and received a round of applause that told him his difference with the management was forgiven and a fine artist was welcomed back.

The opera was Leoncavallo's Constantine, Marchesa and Layetana, in addition to Baklanoff, who sang the title role.

Rigoletto has already been performed several times this season. Its beautiful melodies have made it a favorite, despite its disgusting story and the failure and poverty of Verdi's orchestration. It is least meritorious of the Verdi operas, which are in process day repertoire, and is a strange contrast to the wonderful "Otello," the work of the composer's old age.

Thyra Saln, in appearance, is an ideal Gilda. It is a strange thing but operatic composers have always sought to set here lines who were small, delicate and of tender age and then permitted fat middle-aged sopranos to impersonate them. Lipkowska is small and slender and her age is not very great, although she is not as young as she looks. She sings sweetly and her beautiful voice is particularly suited to the music. She pleased the audience and a prima donnas.

Baklanoff as a soprano who could be tucked under the arm of Rigoletto at the close of the third act, nor who would be so charmed in her boy's suit. But before she meets a shocked death in the final act she sustains stoga and sets Pike Duke to sleep with the "Donna e mobile" and then singing to the "Donna e mobile" herself.

Baklanoff as an impressive Rigoletto. He is by of voice and of nature. There is force in his passion and love in his tenderness and he sings grandly.

Maria Duca as the sprightly Gilda is an excellent and Miss Leverod sang Maddelena excellently. The chorus, as usual, was unpronchable, and Mr. Goodrich conducted a spirited performance.

BERNHARDT A GREAT SAPHO

Hardly a quiver disturbed the repose of the local moralists when it was announced that Sarah Bernhardt would play "Sapho" during her engagement. Yet when "Sapho" was first performed in America a few years ago great was their rage and indignation.

The Bernhardt "Sapho" of last night resembles greatly the American version, a little more freedom in the dialogue is the principle point of difference. It was in five acts, and was of course the original version of Alphone Daudet.

Bernhardt as Sapho again displayed her wonderful versatility, her ability to make such varying characters life-like and arthur. The great passion which bound the former model of Jean Gausson could not be doubted, nor was there anything unnatural in the sexual dying out of love and the replacing of it by something else. Sapho is a great and trying role, but not so fatiguing as "Fedora," and Bernhardt's voice was in better condition than on the previous night.

As usual the acting of the company was excellent, that of Mme. Segon, Decouer, and Maxulian being particularly noticeable.

Business Success Through Publicity

No. 20.

How Small Advertisements Built Up a Great Local Business and Have Now Nationalized It.

Some years ago in New York a firm of clothiers began newspaper advertising with a small cut at the top and uniform body type with little display. Some people thought the firm was foolish in not making its advertisements more prominent. Day in and day on the advertisements appeared and business increased until finally the firm became one of the best known clothing houses in New York city. Others began copying its advertisements, but somehow the imitators didn't succeed as had the original house.

Over a dinner table, a number of advertisers talking of the situation one said: "I think the keynote of the firm's success is—

"It's common sense copy, set in a light face type that stands out by contrast from the usual black face, and persistency, with an emphasis on the persistency, that has increased the business."

So great has the local success of the firm been that now they are advertising for a national business. Advertising with persistency was the cause.

If you have desirable goods, Mr. Dealer or Mr. Manufacturer, and will be persistent in inserting common-sense, attractive copy in papers of large circulation, you will build up your business not only in a local but a national way.

The Boston American covers the 1,100,000 people within Greater Boston as no other paper does. If you insert persistently the right kind of copy you may not only put your goods into dealers' stores, Mr. Manufacturer, but you can secure repeat orders. And if you, Mr. Merchant, no matter how small your store, will persistently advertise in the Boston American, which has a circulation daily of almost 400,000, you will bring people to your store who have never heard of you and will increase your business.

TRAIN FOOTBALL STARS ON CANDY

HANOVER, N. H., Jan. 14.—Dartmouth's football warriors will have chocolates, bon bons, bonbons, home-made fudge, pinoche and all other kinds of candy and sweetmeats, if Dr. C. C. Stewart, A. M., Ph.D., instructor of physiology at the college, has his way in the matter.

Dr. Stewart made an address concerning the diet of football men, in which he said that the trainers were not "starving enough in their methods. "They are afraid to take a chance on carbo-hydrates," said the professor, "and if they were a little more daring they would have faster and better football."

In concluding his address Dr. Stewart suggested that chocolates and other sweetmeats should be used on the training tables and offered to prove that their use would not be injurious. "Too much meat and solids seems to be the trouble at the present time. The carbo-hydrates will give greater energy, more elasticity to the muscles, and fewer players will be found stale at the end of the season."

MORRIS A REAL "WHITE HOPE"

"Toot!" Toot!" Big black engine No. 224 pulled slowly into the yards, with an unusual jerk, came to a stop in the station at Keeping, Okla. The fireman-man looked up at his clock and was surprised to learn that the late afternoon express from the north was four minutes ahead of the schedule.

As he stepped out onto the platform he heard the anxious engineer, leaning far out of the window, yell: "Who won the big fight at Reno this afternoon? Johnson or Jeffries? Jeffries out in the fifteenth round," cried back the station-man.

Carl Morris, the engineer, that night threw his big machine into the roundhouse, and as he climbed down he exclaimed to his fireman:

"I am going to fight Jack Johnson, and believe me I'll get on an engine and stay until I do."

And since July 4 Morris kept his word. He hasn't even looked an engine in the face, and it really looks as though he might lower the colors of the Champion Johnson.

In any run, to-day he looks to be the ONE "White Man's Hope" who may be depended upon to "lick" the holder.

He has had six battles to date and won every one of them by a knockout. Every one of his half dozen opponents were beaten down in less than four rounds. Marvin Hart alone lasting that long.

And now Morris wishes a thousand times over he never climbed into the ring with the Fighting Engineer, for when he was picked up unconscious he was suffering from two broken ribs, a pair of black eyes and a stomach which was pounded so hard that Hart is still feeling on same.

Morris was born in Kentucky on August 4, 1886, and until 1904 he was owned by his father's farm. He then went to Sapulpa and secured a position as helper in a roundhouse.

The first displayed signs of being a fighter day in Okmulgee when a burly negro endeavored to give him an argument. Morris punched the overbearing delight out of the negro, who was the village bear-cat.

This rough and tumble conquest made a hero of Morris all along the road, and finally he was induced to try a hand at the fighting game for financial reasons.

Morris has advantages over every other heavyweight in the world. He is 6 feet 4 inches tall, has a reach of 81 inches and when in condition tips the beam at 235 pounds.

When he first started fighting he weighed 200 pounds, but by hard training has taken on 35 pounds of muscle. He has a wonderful chest, it measuring 49 inches. He believes he gained his wonderful physique because he never fought in the ring before at 200 and has always taken the best of care of his health.

Morris has a great following to-day, and is now considering an offer of a $15,000 purse to fight either Al Kaufman, Tony Ross, Jim Barry, Al Kaufak or Con Comiskey at Tulsa, Okla.

NAMES ADVISERS FOR TRACK TEAM

By E. V. B. PARKE.

"Reggie" Foster, captain of the Harvard track team, has evidently become imbued with the spirit of "progression," so criticised by Coach Mahan, for the announcement of his intention to have appointed an advisory committee of graduates to assist him in matters of importance concerned with the Crimson track team. Old hands are always wiser than young ones, and can dope out track athletics in quicker shape than young ones, especially as the committee will be composed of men who have had great and wide experience in this phase of the sporting world. The committee will be composed as follows: William F. Garrison, graduate treasurer of athletics; Norman W. Bingham, '95; John W. Hallowell, '01; Edgar C. Rust, '04; and William M. Rand, '09.

With two first-class coaches in this sport now at Harvard, and a good bunch of material for the coming season, track athletics should pick up even more than during the past several years with the aid of the new committee.

INTER-CITY BOUTS AT B. A. A. GYM TONIGHT

The intercity boxing bouts between Boston and New York amateurs will be held in the B. A. A. Gymnasium this evening, in conjunction with finals in the open classes, the trials of which were held Wednesday. Five intercity bouts will be held as follows: Nick Albanes of Boston vs. Harry Blier of New York, 115 pounds; Gilbert Gallant of Boston vs. John Macklin of New York, 125 pounds; W. Volk of Boston vs. W. J. Adams of New York, 135 pounds; E. Kelly of Boston vs. Joe Fisher of New York, 145 pounds; George Scott of Boston vs. Burt Williams of New York, in the heavyweight class.

TOMMY BURNS MAY FIGHT SAM LANGFORD

SEATTLE, Jan. 14.—Tommy Burns, formerly champion heavyweight, has cabled to London his acceptance of a fight with Bill Lang for April 17, and Hugh McIntosh, a London promoter, telegraphed Burns as follows:

"Can you meet Bill Lang at Sydney, N. S. W., Easter Monday, April 17, and if winner of Bill Lang-Sam Langford match to be fought here February 15, in London?"

Burns will not go into training for a month or more, as he expects Langford to defend Lang and therefore counts on fighting Langford.

LATEST FASHION FADS will be told by their creator, Lady Duff-Gordon, the world's greatest modiste, in the Sunday AMERICAN.

WOLGAST WILL MEET PACKY

By TAD.

Adonis Wolgast and P. McFarland have been matched to box ten rounds at Milwaukee on February 22.

It came as sort of a shock, but, from all we can learn, the thing is right. Wolgast blew the match with Memsic, which was to be held in Los Angeles, because the managers would not put up a $250 more expense money. It is said that Wolgast asked Jones to get McFarland first, and "Cherokee Tom" did as he was asked.

It is almost a cinch that Packey and Wolgast will go the limit. McFarland is no terrific hitter. It is seldom that he knocks a man out, and it's no pipe to drop A. Wolgast, even though most of us do consider him a cinch.

He's game, if ever a boxer was, and has shown it on more than one occasion. He go with Moran in New York, a year ago, showed us just what he could take. Green gave him a fine lacing in that limited go, but Wolgast never stopped, never squealed, but fought back as hard as he could against tremendous odds.

Nothing could ever put him to the boards in Colt last fight at Fort Richmond, but Wolgast was up at the count of seven, fighting as hard as ever.

He beat Leo Powell out on the coast when they were boxing there, and Leo is sort of a tough bird at that in a twenty-round go.

Packey may beat the German fud in the ten round fixing, as the weight agreed upon is 135 at 7 in the evening giving Packey every day of the week. There will be an awful rumpus in circles neglitzie if Wolgast is counted out. You bet.

RED SO XTO TRAIN AT REDONDO BEACH

The Boston Red Sox will go to Redondo, Cal., for their Spring training. Redondo is in the southern part of the State, about eighteen miles southwest of Los Angeles and on the southern shore of Monica bay. The facilities there, both for baseball practice and other forms of exercise, are excellent. Redondo is a small town, having a population of about 1000. President Farrell is eagerly waiting to hear more about the training quarters from "Tip" O'Neill.

Yale's crack hockey team goes into action against the Dartmouth ice warriors at the Boston Arena to-night in the first collegiate interclass battle of the season here.

It is the first appearance of the Yale team and may be the last unless they will agree to meet Harvard later on in the Crimson's home territory. For that reason packed fans want to give on the fighting brayes from the shade of the Elms, for they know what to expect when a Yale team is battling with a foe. It's the live stuff till the enemy is vanquished or their team is carried off the field.

The green team got in just a little ahead of the Blue last night, but this does not mean that the same thing will happen to the game. Yale will build on a fancied argument in which brawn, speed and clever clevermess will be the factors that count.

Dartmouth's captain, Fred Eaton, says the Green is in the best condition possible and only hopes that Yale will make it hot enough for his men to battle as they like a fast sport. Yale will have a big card in Howe, the captain of the football team this year, who is also an expert on the ice.

LANGFORD MAY MEET JOHNSON

Dispatches received here to-day from Philadelphia say that Jack Johnson and Sam Langford may meet in a six-round bout in that city. An effort will be made to stage the bout at the New American A. C., "Jawn" O'Brien's club.

The story that the two colored rivals may meet cropped out as a result of the presence of Johnson and Joe Woodman in Philly at the same time. Joe has sent a party call for Sam, according to the dispatches, and is keeping mum until the "He-He" kid arrives.

Johnson jumped over from New York yesterday to see O'Brien about appearing at the new fight club. He failed to see O'Brien, as the latter was out of the city.

Jack Hanley, the matchmaker, and Jack Robinson, the secretary of the club, would get talk business with Johnson. The talk it was up to Jack to wait till O'Brien showed up. The latter is expected back in Philadelphia to-day, however.

Joe Woodman, according to dispatches, is still in Philly to-day. He is not telling anyone why he went there, or why he sent out a burly call for Sam to hit the trail.

Woodman has had no conference with Johnson or O'Brien, it is thought, however, that he went to Philadelphia to try and arrange a bout with Johnson.

The match, if it is ever arranged, will be one big gold mine. Even Tony Biddle would not need to do any urging in behalf of his old friend.

FOXY ABE ATTELL WINS HANDS DOWN

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Patsy Kline, the clever featherweight of Newark, N. J., failed to live up to his expectations in his battle with Abe Attell, the champion featherweight of the world, before the National Sporting Club of this city.

Attell's consummate art stood in the way of very much glory for Patsy. To be brief and to the point, Attell toyed with Kline for the greater part of ten rounds and made him look cheap. For the first five periods Patsy did not have a possible look in. He sent in his mighty left at intervals and hit nothing more offensive than the smoke laden atmosphere. Meanwhile Abe popped away with light rights and lefts, landing at will in the clinches and out of them, and stepping back from the dangerous Kline wallop. Up to the sixth it was a miserable exhibition to watch. Then things began to liven up. Abie changed his love taps to solid blows and gave Kline his opportunity. Over shot the left, squarely on Attell's jaw, and Abie fell into a clinch. Bill Kline failed to follow his temporary advantage and the new champion was soon back on the job, giving five clean punches, and blocking the best Patsy had.

Even though Attell seemed to lack the vim of the old days he has lost none of his boxing cunning and he won hands down.

MIGHTY TURK'S TOE HOLD BREAKS BONES

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 14.—In the first bout of a wrestling match here, Yusif Mahmout, in using a toe hold on the left foot of William Demetral, fractured a bone. After twenty-three minutes and seconds he downed Demetral with a leg hold. Demetral was unable to compete further and Mahmout was declared the winner.

CHANEY WHIPS BUCK, BUT LATTER IS GAME

BALTIMORE, Jan. 14.—Tommy Buck of Philadelphia was given a severe lacing by George Chaney of this city before the Eureka A. C. The bout went fifteen rounds and was Chaney's from start to finish. He was the aggressor throughout and dealt out hard punishment.

Buck's gameness was the only thing that saved him from a knockout. He was in bad shape in the second round and was all but gone in the last three rounds, but managed to last the contest out by holding and stalling.

SPORTS of all SORTS

THE BREAK THAT SEVERS ALL chance of another football game between Pennsylvania and Michigan, after this year, is deeply regretted the country over. It looks as if the new eligibility rules at Penn would do credit to some of the codes of the Medes and Persians. If their text is correctly reported, and they mark the parting of the ways between the famous colleges, whose East, Penn and Western game has been one of the great annual features of recent football seasons.

* * *

THE BOSTON WISE MEN, WHO DAILY follow the races at Jacksonville are finding it quite the time of their lives to pick the winners. The good things that some over "go to seed" with an alarming frequency, and the fellows who can land a parlay is looked upon as almost the seventh son of a prophet. There was probably never a race meeting where the smart sharpers were harkiey to select than in Florida at this time. And it seems no hard story to reconcile that Tom Shaw, the present king of American jockeys, dropped a cool $100,000 there in a single month last year.

* * *

THE OWNERS OF THE PROVIDENCE Ball Club, Messrs. Crowley, Layda and Hugh Duffy of this city, have signed up three of the best known minor league ball players in the country in Harry Arndt, Phelan of Lynn and Mike Welday. The first player is all in by age and accident, and the last two are weak with the swat stick, even for the Eastern League.

* * *

THE STATEMENT OF HUB HART, the old Georgetown college crack, as to the chicanery of the major and minor league ball clubs, is another instance of how the loopholes in existing baseball laws are taken advantage of. Hart is compelled to suffer a $500 monetary loss this year, without redress, and it was only a few days ago that Dan Hawley of East Weymouth experienced how it was likewise compelled to suffer a loss of $400, because no arrangement could be made for his transfer from the Indianapolis team to Joe Kelley's Maple Leafs. Any day there may be a ball player test his rights under the present laws in the courts, and if so some of the baseball magnates may be led a merry dance.

STAR BOXERS IN BIG BENEFIT

The volunteer talent for the Nelden benefit to be held at the Armory A. A. next Friday evening is growing in strength and numbers every day. Billy Hamilton, manager of Johnny Glover, offered the services of the South Boston boxer to-day and was promptly accepted. Billy Pierce will select a suitable opponent for Glover.

Sam Langford will be on hand and will probably have George Byers as a sparring partner. Big Bob Armstrong, who has aided many champions in their preliminary training, will don the gloves with some local heavyweight, and Jim Barry, Andrew Morris, Sandy Ferguson and Dan Flynn will be among the heavyweights who will appear.

Matty Baldwin has sent word that he would be on hand next Friday night and hopes to be introduced as "the man who defeated Pal Moore" at the Armory A. A. Yucalay. Alec McLean has volunteered the services of all the boxers under his management.

Johnny Nelden will arrive in Boston next Wednesday morning and, while he is incapacitated physically, will attend the benefit if it is possible for him to do so.

The assessment for members and guests for the benefit will be $1, and applications are already being received at Armory A. A., Wilham A. Pierce, Armory A. A., No. 541 Tremont street, has charge of the ticket arrangements, and applications for seats should be made to him.

George Tuohey has promised to have three excellent wrestling bouts on the program, and it now seems a certainty that the benefit will be productive of one of the liveliest athletic attractions that has ever been presented in Boston.

On account of the length of the program it may be necessary to have the first boxing bout start at 7:45 p. m.

Who's Who IN SPORT

WARREN BROWN—No. 31.

Warren Brown, semi-professional ball player and star bowler; born in Waltham in 1878; attended North School in that city; played first base on Williams High nine; coveted berths six years with cornet team of Franklin, quitting baseball in 1902; inked with Somersets in City League season of 1903-4; with City Hall five champions of City League, in 1905; Carondi in City and Greater Boston Leagues 1896-7, Wildey in City League in 1898; been in big match games four times with Somersets when they made world record of 1,570, Goodhue's Pets when they set record at 1,615, with Peebler's Pets in 1910, when they made a record of 1,651; held world's three-string record with Peebler's for several years of '05; manager of Beals alleys; is not married and resides in Waltham.

FRANK CONNAUGHTON TO MANAGE BROCKTON

BROCKTON, Jan. 14.—After an hour's conference between John J. McGee of the Brockton baseball club and Frank Connaughton, last year in charge of the Waterbury champions of the Connecticut League, the latter's signature to a contract for the season of 1911 was secured. He is to take entire charge of the local club on the playing field.

FLAYS MAGNATES FOR UNFAIRNESS

The often declared assertion of local players in the minor leagues against the "covering up" tactics practiced by the owned advisors of the major is strikingly illustrated in the case of Hub Hart, the old Georgetown college favorite, later of Cleveland, Chicago White Stockings, and for the past two seasons with Montgomery in the Southern League.

Hart has the distinction of the present baseball laws, which is a marked injustice to the player," said Hart, to the AMERICAN. "I know positively that I was drafted by the Cleveland Americans upon the recommendation of Manager W. R. Armour of the Toledo club, and I was naturally pleased to return to the American League, since I first played with Chicago. You will appreciate the difficulties I had breaking into the majors with such a portion called as Billy Sullivan doing practically the backstop work for the White Sox. And now I counted upon another chance in the big league.

"And now, what is the result. Manager Armour, who had, by his advice, secured my draft to Cleveland, purchases my release from the Naps, and I am allowed to go to Toledo, or remain out of organized baseball.

"In the meantime I have offers from the Pacific Coast, where I could secure at least $500 to $600 more than I can get on in the Ohio town, and my hands are tied.

"Between the drafting and covering up of the minor league player, and the chicanery that obtains I cannot see where the private rights of the player are protected.

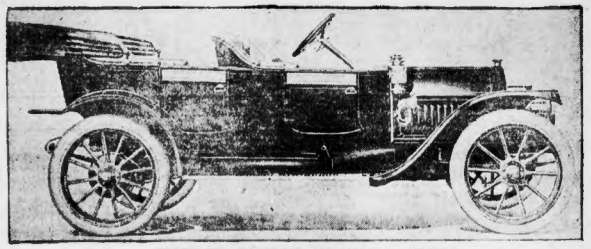
SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT



SEVEN 1911 TOURING AUTOMOBILES FREE.

The management of the Boston American has received within the last week hundreds and hundreds of letters from contestants enrolled in this contest, who state that their possibilities of securing vote credits will be greatly limited if only vote coupons clipped from the American are to be credited. From the large volume of these letters it is plainly evident that there seems to be a general demand on the part of contestants that they be allowed to "kill two birds with one stone," and when requesting relatives, friends and acquaintances to save the vote coupons that they be allowed to obtain regular subscriptions and be given a vote credit for subscriptions so obtained.

With a desire to do everything possible to comply with the wishes of the majority of our contestants, the American, as an added feature, makes this Special Announcement.

In addition to the one-vote coupon in the daily American and the ten-vote coupon in the Sunday American, credit will be allowed for Sunday subscriptions as follows:

6 months' subscription to the Sunday American....500 votes
1 year's subscription to the Sunday American, 1,500 votes

Here is the GUARANTEE PLAN:

No Subscription for less than six months will be received.

Hundreds of ENROLLED contestants have requested that they be allowed to collect paid-in-advance subscriptions and receive credit for same. The American does not care to do this, as it makes the conditions too difficult for the majority of contestants, where it is necessary to collect the full amount of the subscription in advance. On this GUARANTEE PLAN, however, contestants have many advantages. For instance: When asking a relative, friend or acquaintance to save the votes for you, you would get a credit for only these actual votes given to you by your friends.

It is just as easy to get a subscription where you do not have to collect the full amount of same in cash in advance, and you then will not only get credit for the votes so allowed you for each subscription, but your friends who subscribe can also save the coupons which will appear in each copy of the Sunday American they receive during the term of their subscription. Thus you get votes from the American, which your friends will save for you, and you get the vote credits which every subscription entitles you to.

The American will not permit the sale of papers in bulk.

Subscriptions will be received only on forms provided by the American. These forms are now being printed and will be ready for distribution on next Friday, January 20th. Mistakes Made by Women

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal Examiner

WOMEN are always anxious to please men, and yet a list of the mistakes which they make in their association with men would fill an encyclopedia.

There is the woman who, because of her beauty or accomplishments, receives much attention from the opposite sex. When, in order to augment her worth in the eyes of some admirer, she relates to him the many compliments which have been paid to her by other men she commits a serious blunder.

A man is sheeplike in his impulse to follow the herd over the fence, but he likes to think there is a little originality in his method of jumping. He never is aware he may be of a woman's popularity with other men, as is not entertained by hearing the woman relate what other men have said to her, nor does he enjoy thinking that his compliments are but a rehash of those given by his predecessors.

The Limitations of Men

It is always a mistake for a young woman to talk to a man as if she was blase. Many innocent, accomplished girls adopt this manner, thinking it will render them attractive in the eyes of men.

Men are not analytic or deep-minded enough in regard to our sex to realize that a girl who has drunk too deeply of the waters of knowledge does not talk of it. Men take us for what we seem, not for what we are. The most hardened man-hater who wears a mask of innocence fares better with them than the good, sweet-hearted girl who puts on blase airs and pretends to be a little wicked.

Men judge by appearances far more than women do, and, except in cases where women are rivals, they are less liable to condemn one another for a slight lapse of speech or conduct than are to condemn us.

Other Mistakes

It is a mistake for a woman (wife, mother, sister or sweetheart) to make plans for the disposal of all a man's spare hours, and then expect him to enjoy himself.

It is a mistake for a woman to try to prove to men her great knowledge and superior intellect. They enjoy an intellectual woman when they discover her brightness themselves, but they do not like to have her force her brains and learning upon them.

But it is just as great a mistake to assume an air of insipidity and expect a man to think it charming. Men are not acting in their demands. Too much or too little brain in woman is equally offensive to them.

It is the mistake of a lifetime to give a man any liberty which you would not want known, and expect him to keep the matter a secret.

Be Discreet

The exceptional man will sometimes hide the indiscretion of a young girl who he believes acted from ignorance; but the average man, in the highest the same as in the lowest walks of life, boasts of his successes with foolish women, and the rendezvous, the letter, the embrace or the souvenir, which she has given him, thinking it will never be known to other than herself is merely a matter of gossip among a dozen people.

It is the worst mistake of all for a woman to think she can make no mistake. The moment that conviction enters her head she is on the highway to some grand blunder whereby she will wound, disgust or antagonize the man she most cares for.

Be Cautious

Eternal watchfulness, never falling caution, perpetual tact and equal quantities of pride and humility are necessary ingredients in the behavior a woman needs to use with men.

This should be garnished with good sense, flavored with coquetry and served with good nature. And even then we will be liable to make some mistakes.

Since one man will complain of too much coquetry in the flavoring, and another will call it insipid, one will say we have too much pride to render the dish palatable, and another will complain of an overdose of humility; and still another will think we serve our conduct too cold, while his comrade will think the opposite.

MOST SHAMEFUL POLITICS—Details of the most shameful chapter in American political history will be given in a splendidly illustrated article in the Sunday AMERICAN.

The Season Doesn't Change the Girl

The Unwelcome Girl Baby

by DOROTHY DIX

A POOR, little, young, nerve-racked, prospective mother writes me a pitiful letter in which she implores me to say a word in defence of girl babies, and in excuse for the mothers who are so unaccommodating as to bring these undesired citizens into the world.

"My husband and his family have badgered me almost out of my life on this matter," she writes, "as if nature, and not I, did not decide the child's sex, but I honestly believe that if my baby is a girl that my husband and my in-laws will be so angry that they will be glad if we both die. Personally, I should prefer my baby to be a girl, because I have observed that girls are generally more comfort to their parents than boys are."

This is rather a logical view to take of a commonplace occurrence. Nevertheless, what my correspondent states is, in all essence, true. It is a fact that although tenths of the girl babies come unwelcomed into life, and that the words, "it is a fine girl, sir," falls with a dull, cold thud of disappointment on the average man's ears.

Primitive Conditions

Why? You will have to go back to primitive times for the answer, to tribal times when the family held its own with clubs and bows and arrows and spears and javelins against its enemies, and its strength was in the number of fighting men it could muster. Then sons were desirable, and daughters encumbrances. Later on, when the family acquired a name and lands and herds, the pride of race began, and sons were desirable to inherit the wealth and carry on the glory of the name, and daughters, who married and took other names, were unconsidered trifles.

Among the poorer people, sons who could till the soil and bring in money were desirable, and daughters who must be supported were burdens; and so the tradition grew up that a boy was more valuable to the parents than a girl. It is a tradition that even the law accepts, for if a boy is killed by an automobile or the railroad the parents can recover larger damages than if a girl had been killed.

It may be that in the past, under different conditions of society, and in a country with a hereditary aristocracy, parents were entitled to strike upon the cymbals and utter loud rejoicings above the cradle of a boy, and to beat upon their breasts and tear their garments with wailings and lamentations over the bassinette of a girl; but in this day and age, in democratic U. S. A., where all the average parent has to give to his children is a title to go out and make their own living, why anybody should prefer a boy baby to a girl baby is past comprehension.

Life Is Easier for Men

Of course, if parents were absolutely altruistic, they might well wish the baby to be a boy for its own sake, because life is so much easier on men than it is on women; and, generally speaking, a boy has a better chance of being healthy and happy than a girl has.

But so far as the parents themselves are concerned the one best bet is that the daughter will be a comfort, and the son an anxiety. Of course there are many good sons, but almost every girl is a good daughter, where are few parents so blessed as never to have to shed a tear over their boys, and there are not many parents, thank God, who are called upon to weep over wayward girls. The haggard-eyed old mothers that we see did not get that look of dumb misery in their eyes sitting up waiting for prodigal daughters to come home. They got it waiting for the return of the prodigal son.

It is the daughters who remember their parents, and the sons who forget. A boy leaves home to seek his fortune. He prospers, marries, becomes absorbed in his own affairs so that he gets too busy to write back home, or even to go to see the old folks he has left behind him, but a daughter's heart goes back from the ends of the earth to her father and mother. She may be overburdened with work and care, but she makes time somehow to show her love and loyalty to her parents.

Girls Hear Family Appeal

Also, just as a mere financial asset the girl baby in her cradle is worth more than the boy baby.

The boy will probably grow up to earn more than the girl, but the girl will make the bigger divide with her parents. In poor families nowadays the girl goes to work just as soon as her brothers, and it is noticeable that while the boy gives his mother, if he is a good lad, part of what he earns, the girl turns over her whole pay envelope to her mother.

It is Mandie, and not John, who buys the new curtains, and the rug, and the bits of furniture to make the home comfortable. The main reason why working women do not save more money and get ahead faster is because they do not shut their ears, as men do, to the family appeal. They cannot selfishly bank money when mother needs a new dress so badly, and father's coat is so shabby.

If you do not believe that the girl baby is the stuff on which her parents may safely count on leaning in their old age, just look about you. Is it not the daughter to have a baby. That's all.

He Gives Some Pointers

By KENNETT HARRIS

THE nice old gentleman looked at the little boy with grave reproach and his voice was inexpressibly sad. "Did I see you shooting at that poor cat, or did my eyes deceive me?" he asked.

The little boy hung his head and put the hand that held the rubber catapult well behind him.

The nice old gentleman took off his spectacles and examined them closely; then he shook his head and readjusted them. "I don't think there was any mistake about it," he said. "It was a fortnight-old cat and it was walking calmly and quietly along the fence, never dreaming that a young fiend in human shape was meditating its destruction. Then I saw it jump."

The little boy grinned.

"I'm ashamed of you," declared the nice old gentleman. "Not only inflicting a nervous shock upon the poor creature, but positively gloating over it. A pretty, graceful, harmless, necessary cat! Perhaps a mother cat, with a large family of helpless kittens depending upon it for support and education; possibly the sole solace of a lonely but loving heart that was awaiting it by a virginal tea-table. A soft, purring, playful pet that, had your shot sped true, would never more have rubbed its furry sides against familiar legs! Willie, I would hardly have believed it of you."

Extenuating Circumstance

"I didn't hit it," pleaded the little boy.

"No," admitted the nice old gentleman, "you didn't hit it. It was a sickeningly bad shot at that short distance. You didn't hit it, but the cruel purpose was there. It was no emotion of pity that marred your aim. You did your best to hit it, and if it was a blamed cock-eyed lost. If you had succeeded in your fell purpose, a poor, stricken, tortured beast would have crept away to die an anguished death in an ash barrel, or it might have dragged out a painful and maimed existence worse than death itself. That would have tickled you to death, I suppose—what?"

"No, sir," replied the little boy, his mouth beginning to work.

"In a secluded corner of some dark basement, blind and helpless little kitties would have crawled around mewing plaintively for warmth and nourishment that would never have come," pursued the nice old gentleman, relentlessly. "Hour after hour their cries would have become fainter and their movements feebler until, one by one, they died."

The little boy sniffed three times.

"The other picture that I invite you to contemplate is that of a boy in whose face still lingers traces of a former beauty," the nice old gentleman went on. "His eyes are swollen and red and also watha the flood distressingly. Wringing her hands, and ever and anon she opens the back door and calls, 'Puss, puss, puss, puss!' Presently she takes down the receiver from the telephone and asks Central to give her police headquarters. That's the lady that owns the cat, you understand. While she is then got through with the telephone she lows her head upon her arms and sobs as though her heart would break. And Tabby is writhing in an ash-barrel!"

A tear rolled down the little boy's nose. "Here, here!" said the nice old gentleman. "It isn't as bad as that. You don't need to feel quite so grieved about it, buddy. You know the cat got away, and she's probably curled up with her kittens right now and is lapping up cream out of a Hayland saucer. Cheer up. You didn't hit her, you know."

He Gets Some Pointers

"I—I—might have," enlvelled the little boy.

"Oh, no," the nice old gentleman assured him. "Not in a million years, Willie. In the first place you always want to aim a little ahead when you're trying to hit something that's moving. Remember that. A little high, too, to allow for the attraction of gravitation. If you keep on that line, you hit the fence three feet below if it was an inch. In the second place, let me look at your slingshot."

"I thought so," said the nice old gentleman, as he examined the engine of destruction. "We've got to get a slingster that can't shoot. I know where there's a dandy on the peach tree, and I'll cut it for you. Then—oh, Jimmy! sou've got one of the rubbers worn out at the crotch. That's the principal trouble with it. I'll take it up this way. See? Now lend me one of your bullets. Quick! There's another cat a-coming. I won't hurt it. I'll just give it a gentle little reminder to keep off our back fence."

To Be Continued Monday.

MADAME X

A Great Emotional Story of Mother Love, Novelized by J. W. McConaughy by Special Arrangement With Henry W. Savage from Alexandre Bisson's Powerful Drama.

Copyright, 1910, by the H. K. Fly Co

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued)

FAR back over the path of those twenty years Jacqueline had learned to hate her husband, but her memory and love of her boy grew stronger. She had sunk from degradation to despair. She had been a man's toy a year, his pleasure of a month and his plaything of an hour. Gradually it all the mother love had lived in the blackened soul of the mother heart-scarred and calloused as it was—yet yearned for her boy. But for the years of loathsome vice, of drink and drugs, would have brought at last the numbness of oblivion. She had sought in vain. She had steeped herself in vice until at times the life within flickered dangerously. But it brought never a moment of forgetfulness. When she was sober, or not under the influence of liquor or drugs, she lived in the darkness of black despair. And when she turned to them "to help her forget," she did not know that that was not the reason. They were old and quickened the slowly numbing brain until she could feel again the wild anguish of hopeless loss; and as she sobbed out her agony she vaguely felt that she was again more nearly worthy to press her child to her breast.

One Dismal Ray of Hope.

In the past few months her enfeebled mind had gloated miserably over one dismal ray of hope—the hope of one moment of joy before she died. She had learned from a half-breed woman in Caracas the art of telling fortunes with cards, and hour after hour she retold her future with the soiled pack that she always carried. They told her that the fleeting second of happiness would be bought at the price of one life, to be followed by the end of her own. To that promise she clung.

The storm of weeping, as in the case with sobs that are due wholly or in part to drunkenness, ended as abruptly as it had begun. She took another swallow of the other and began laying out the cards in the same weary seven rows. She looked over them quickly and wept again. Always the two deaths!

"Now, then," she straightened up with a snuffle, "I'll try again."

She was spreading them out once more when there came a knock at the door.

"Come in!" she called, without looking up. The maid, Marie, entered with pen and ink and a form that the police require the hotel-keepers to have filled out and filed by every guest.

She advanced, a little timidly, to the table and said:

"I hope I'm not disturbing you, madame, but the police make us go through this business." She held up the blank form.

The woman looked up, puzzled for a moment, and then nodded.

"Oh, yes, well then——— Oh, write it yourself!" she snapped irritably, turning again to the cards. She took another drink of ether and looked up at the maid, as if she did not exactly remember the purpose of her visit.

"Madame and Madame Laroque," she said at last, listlessly, her eyes on the table. "From Buenos Ayres, on their way to Paris."

Marie filled in the blank.

"Paris, Texas, thank you, madame," she said. Then she stood looking curiously at the cards.

The woman raised her head.

"Is that all?"

"Then you really believe in them?"

"They're the only thing I do believe in," was the weary response.

"That's funny," exclaimed the maid, with a nervous little smile. "I don't believe in them at all!"

"You will!" was the grim comment.

"Oh, it's like palmistry and all that sort of thing. It's all nonsense."

Looked at Her Pityingly

Jacqueline looked up at her pityingly.

"You don't know what you're talking about!" she declared, a little thickly. The ether and absinthe were beginning to work more powerfully.

"What do the cards tell you?" asked Marie, growing interested. Jacqueline gazed over the table.

"Always the same thing, always the same thing!" she said, with a glassy stare, meant to be impressive. "Death! My own death! And it's coming very soon. That's what the cards tell me."

The maid's eyes opened wide.

"Really?" she exclaimed breathlessly. "They never change!" the woman went on in a dull monotone. Dissipation had left little of expression and given much of harshness to her voice. "I can see blood—a great deal of blood! But before I die I shall see the two people that I always see in my dreams, waking or sleeping—the man I love more than anything else in the world and the man I hate more than anything else in the world! The cards have been prophesying me for the last three months that I shall see them soon and then—I'll die! The cards have never been wrong, and that's why I wanted to get back to France."

"You believe in them as much as that?" asked the maid, wonderingly.

"Yes!"

Marie hesitated before consulting the cards for some moments in silence.

"Won't you tell my fortune?" she asked at last with a little hesitation.

"What's the good if you don't believe?" retorted the woman, without looking up.

"Oh, I don't be—I don't believe in it," she stammered with a slight blush, "but I—I—do believe in it!"

Studied Cards in Silence

Jacqueline glanced at her with the dispassionate, rolling gaze of a drunkard.

"Sit down!" she commanded. While Marie was settling herself on the edge of the bed she took another drink of the ether.

"Is that ether you're drinking?" asked the girl.

"Yes—Yes!" coughed the woman, slipping in the cards.

"It smells horribly strong! What does it do to you?" she inquired, with shuddering curiosity.

"It changes my ideas and that's a good deal," the woman replied. "But it gets on my nerves sometimes and then I cry or smash the furniture." Maria started.

"But that doesn't matter! What do you want to know?"

"Oh, but if I tell you that," smiled the maid, cunningly, "there'll be nothing in your telling my fortune, will there?"

"Don't tell me anything!" mumbled Jacqueline, shuffling the cards and spreading them out once more. Then:

"You're married!" she announced.

"Oh, there's nothing in that!" sniffed Marie. "You saw my ring."

"Yes, the darling! Seven months old."

"You're in love."

The maid's cheeks flushed with excitement.

"Yes! Yes!" she exclaimed.

"But not with your husband."

She straightened up.

"No, I should think not!" she exclaimed, almost indignantly.

"You are going to leave your husband!" went on the dull, even voice. Marie's cheeks grew red and she stopped, but did not reply. Jacqueline looked up slowly.

"Is it true?"

"Yes it's quite true!" was the low reply in an awed tone. Then she asked by way of confession: "My husband is Victor, the boots, who brought up your luggage."

"Victor!" the woman repeated, and remarked the woman, indifferently.

"Yes," the girl replied contemptuously, "but he's such a common sort of man!"

"And the other?" There was awakening interest in the stupid eyes and dull voice.

"Oh, the other is a gentleman! A real gentleman!" she cried, clasping her hands joyously. "He's a commercial traveler—is sooo!" He dresses beautifully and is handsome—oh—oh—I am to meet him to-night at the Grand Cafe, opposite the theatre, and to-morrow we shall be far away!"

"And your baby?"

The girl shrugged her shoulders indifferently.

"She's out to nurse," she replied, "and I know his father will not let him want for anything."

Jacqueline consulted the bottle again.

"Look here, my girl! You're going to make a mistake!" she declared, with drunken bluntness. "Take my tip and stay with your husband! He false to him if you must, but stay with him!"

"No, no! I love no one in the world but Anatole!" cried the girl, melodramatically. "And I'm going away with him to-night!"

"Well, you'll suffer in the long run!" was the other's grim assurance, with something of a return of her usual indifference. "No, I shan't! Anatole loves the very ground I walk on!" declared Marie, proudly.

"Hmph! He may now, but it won't last," retorted the woman. "Your lover will leave and you'll take another—and then a third and fourth, and you'll see what sort of a life that means. I know!"

The girl opened her pretty eyes wide.

"Do you?" she asked, with a little shiver of awe.

"Yes! I was about your age when I left my husband and my child. I hate my husband, God! How I hate him!" she burst out, her eyes blazing with insane fury, her clenched fists shaking. Marie half started toward the door, fearing that one of the furniture-breaking moods was coming on. But as suddenly the voice dropped back to its toneless level and the eyes dulled. "But I'm dying because my child is not with me. Child! What he means to me! I've spent four now, and I'm sure he's a tall, handsome boy—everybody loves him and admires. Just think of it! I might be walking down the street—now—on his arm. Wouldn't I be proud! And I don't even know him. I think of him night and day—all the time I think of him. And if he came into this room now I wouldn't know him. But I shall see him again!" she cried excitedly, clutching the cards. "I'm sure of that! I know it! And I shall not—he also will recognize his—and press him to my heart. He'll never know who I am!"

Desperate Desmond

Five minutes more and Desperate Desmond would have been smothered to death in that heap of sand. But just because Hadji Ben Hassam wants to see his rifle back he goes and rescues the cur. Did you ever know it to fail. Just when you think the villain is down and out, somebody always butts in.

Mounted on their fiery Arabian steeds, Desmond and Ben give chase to the aeroplane. They wouldn't stand a ghost of a chance if it were not for the fact that the machine is heavily loaded and the gasoline tank nearly empty. Rosamond is at the wheel. Claude and the aviator have other work to do.

Arabian horses may be a whole lot classier than ordinary nags, but that doesn't prevent them from being fond of oats. When the aviator shows them the first squirm meal they have seen for a week, they jump right at it, thus giving the bird man an elegant chance to throw a lariat around their front legs.

In the meantime, Claude is not idle. As Desmond and the Sheik are thrown from their horses our hero assumes them also. Now if the aviator could only shoot the aeroplane about ten thousand feet up in the air and then let Desmond drop! But, as we said before, the gasoline supply is running low.

Another good scheme would be to drag the villain and his pal along the ground for seven or eight miles. It would be rather brutal, and it might muss up the deserv a bit, but who cares! If Desmond had the same chance as Claude he'd do it in a minute, if he couldn't think of something worse.

Claude believes in letting the law take its course, so he is towing Desmond and Ben to the nearest police station, which may be a thousand miles away for all we know. Arabian steeds make fairly good motive power for an aeroplane when it is running on the ground. No pictures tomorrow. Wait till Monday.

"THE GAMBLERS"

The Story of Charles Klein's Greatest Play. A Romance of Society and Financial Life. Novelized by J. W. McConaughy. Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Examiner

CHAPTER I.
Outside of Eden

EMERSON caught one glimpse of her white face as she passed him, walking slowly up the aisle, and even in the agony of his own soul he vaguely wondered why she should be so pale.

For an instant their eyes met, and she had passed on, but in that moment the work of years past was completed.

He had wakened at last, and wakened too late!

He wondered if his own face was ghastly, and at the thought that his acquaintances might read there the story of his suffering he clenched his fists until he could feel the nails bite into the palms through the gloves. He thanked God that Bella, beautiful in her bridesmaid's gown, had not noticed him as she followed in Catherine's wake.

Would he have strength enough to stand through the ceremony and appear properly jubilant when the time for congratulations came? He threw a half-frightened glance about him. Everywhere was some one in knew, some one who knew him.

In the Inevitable's Grip

All of them had heard his name and Catherine's mentioned in the same breath for years past, and they would be looking for signs of distress as surgery as a schoolboy watching the futile wriggles of an impaled beetle. He shuddered and momentarily closed his eyes.

"The Voice that breathed o'er Eden.

That earliest wedding day——"

He opened his eyes and raised them slowly toward the altar.

"The primal marriage blessing.

It hath not passed away."

He drew in his breath with a sharp gasp. A young girl standing beside him looked at him curiously, and he bit his lip. He knew that she had heard even above the music, and he was frightened to think that he had so little self-control. He wished that she would move away, or that he could do so himself.

He never knew before how much he detested the scent of lilies of the valley, and she wore a small cluster pinned to her bodice, just below her left shoulder. From that day to the end of his life he fled from the scent of lilies of the valley.

The Ceremony

His eyes were on the group at the altar, but he was looking at the scene as at something unreal. He hardly heard the little rustles and whispers about him, as the women refined their necks to see. He could not see Catherine's face, but he frequently caught the line of Darwin's splendid profile and the strong head above the broad, black-coated shoulders.

Now her father was stepping forward. He put Catherine's hand in Darwin's.

"Be present, Mighty Father, to give away this bride!" leaped forth from the organ in exultant appeal. He pressed his lips together and forced himself to hold his eyes on the group at the altar. His lips felt dry, but he dared not moisten them, and he could feel that his forehead was damp. He was afraid to touch his handkerchief. What girl beside him might suspect. Thank God! It would soon be over now. But there was one turn of the rack that he had forgotten.

Darwin drew her gently into his arms and kissed her upturned lips. Again Emerson caught a sharp breath, and the girl looked up. He did not see—he was only conscious that she had noticed. By a terrible effort, he kept his eyes open, but the sight was wiped from them. The church was filled with a gray-white mist.

The crash of the opening lines of Mendelssohn, like a dash of cold water, brought his slowly moving brain to a complete consciousness of his surroundings. The great nave was alive with flashing color and exclamations, greetings, laughter, whispers and the rustle of a hundred skirts. On every side he heard:

"Wasn't it a lovely wedding?"

"Didn't Catherine look too sweet!"

"How distinguished Mr. Darwin looks with his gray hair!"

"Hello, old man! Darwin's a lucky bird, eh?"

A business associate slapped Emerson heartily on the shoulder.

"Hello, Emerson!" he exclaimed, with a jovial smile. "By George, I don't see how even a hair-splitting lawyer like Darwin could make a choice between that girl and your sister!"

The Protecting Mask

Emerson smiled back at him and murmured something meant to be a laughing rejoinder as his friend passed on. He returned bows and greetings with his usual grave courtesy, and he wondered at himself as he did it.

Could it be possible that his face showed nothing of the tumult in his soul? Could it be possible that there was nothing unusual about his behavior?

He might have made himself easy. His was not the type of face that may easily be read. He stood half a head above most of the men in the church, and more than one pair of feminine eyes looked with admiration at the wide-set, calm, gray eyes, the long, slender nose with the slight hook at the end, the straight, well-formed mouth and the long, salient line of the jaw. For there was beauty there—the beauty of unbending strength.

So thought his sister as she hurried through the throng toward him.

"Billy?" she exclaimed, touching his arm. "What on earth are you standing around here for? Don't you know that we're waiting for you?"

Incredulity

Emerson started and stared at his sister in sudden alarm.

"Why—why, I—don't know, Sis!" he stammered. "I—I—have just learned—that I can't go with you!"

"Just learned! Can't go with us!" she echoed, her face blank with amazement. "Why—why—Here! Come in here!" she ended grimly, drawing him into a pew. "Now tell me what you mean by this nonsense!"

With an effort he pulled himself together and grasped at the first idea that formed itself.

"Why, you see, Sis," he began, haltingly, "it is absolutely necessary that I see Fred Tooker this afternoon. You know, he'——"

"I know he went to Chicago yesterday," she cut in, bitingly. "Or, at least, you said he'd gone!"

Isabel's eyes were beginning to sparkle dangerously. Her brother could not hide his confusion.

Exit Emerson

"I know! I know!" he began, hastily. "But he didn't go"——

"And a messenger came right up here to the church and walked in and found you and told you he wanted to see you! Billy, what on earth is the matter with you?"

For a fraction of a second his lip trembled as he bent over her.

"For pity's sake, Sis!" he pleaded in a low, unsteady voice. "Don't ask me to go. Tell you I'm sick, or anything. But I can't go. That's all!"

And he was gone.

His sister gazed after him dumbly until he had passed out of the church. Then a half-formed, instantly suppressed thought crossed her mind—

"I wonder if Billy realizes——" She sighed and hurried back to the vestry.

The excuse, in a more coherent and plausible form, was offered and accepted, but Catherine Darwin turned her face away that her friend might not see something that came to her eyes.

In a Daze

What a fool she had been to think that he might have loved her! He did not even care enough to treat her with common courtesy on her wedding day.

Emerson forced his way through the throng at the door and in front of the line of carriages at the curb, bowing nervously to everyone who met his eye in a panic lest he should seem ill at ease.

He hurried diagonally across the avenue and started north, walking as fast as he could. Except that he desired above everything else in the world to be utterly alone, he had no idea where he was going or what he was going to do.

In spite of the rapid, even pace at which he walked, he was in a condition approaching somnambulism. He blindly took the left-hand side of the sidewalk and but for the fact that men and women respectfully gave the right of way after a glance at his powerful frame and great shoulders, he would have had several embarrassing collisions.

He did brush against several men rather roughly, but after an impatient, irritated glance at the hurrying figure in the immaculate frock coat and silk hat, they passed on with the easy philosophy of New Yorkers who are used to being walked on, jostled and shoved all their lives.

Into the Park

At Fifty-seventh street, where an offshoot of the crosstown traffic takes a side channel to get away from the Plaza, he recrossed the avenue and plunged into a stalwart Irish policeman of the Traffic Squad who ordinarily "didn't take any truck from nobody."

He was about to make some distinctly audible and forcible comment on Emerson's system of making a crossing, when he noticed a slight lurch in the young man's walk and grinned as he reflected that he shared a weakness with Sweildom.

"Stoned again?" he murmured.

Emerson was not conscious that he had literally come into contact with the law. He strode blindly on toward the Plaza entrance to the Park. With the instinct that had come down to him through millions of years of evolution, he was seeking solitude in his pain.

At Fifty-eighth street he started, straight as the crow flies, across the Plaza, past the statue of Sherman, to the entrance of the Park. He stepped off the curb directly in front of an enormous limousine. The chauffeur jammed on the brake with a jerk and cursed him fluently in bad English and excellent French.

Seeking Weariness

He entered the Park, walking as rapidly as ever. On past the Zoo, across the upper end of the Mall, past the western side of the lake, up the West Drive, along the edge of the reservoir and into the Wilderness, he marched as fast as he could put foot to ground.

In thirty minutes he was out again and headed south on the east side. At the foot of the reservoir he turned west along the bridle path and then south over the route that he had followed coming in, until he could see the buildings at Fifty-ninth street through the half-bare Autumn trees. Then he turned back and made the long march again.

By the time he had reached the lake on his way back the second time, the yellow sunlight of late afternoon was striking through the trees in long diagonals, and he was at last beginning to feel tired. With the physical weariness, the whirl in his brain died away. At last he could think clearly.

He glanced at his watch. It was half-past four. Their train would just about be crossing Spuyten Duyvil now, he thought, and groaned as he snapped the lid. He dropped on to a bench, facing the west, and looked across the water.

A weak man may love with his lips, or his eyes, or his heart, but the love of a strong man goes to his inner life, and when it is struck he is shaken to the foundation.

And, with his strength, Emerson had a keen, far-reaching imagination, the imagination that afterward enabled him to dream out the gigantic combinations that frightened the kings of finance into an alliance to crush him.

With his imagination as executioner, he entered the torture-room of Might-Have-Been that evening on the bench by the lake.

His eyes were on the group at the altar, but he was looking at the scene as something unreal.

He looked back over the long years of intimate companionship with Catherine and asked himself what he could do, now that it was all over.

He could give himself no answer.

Never could he again pick up the telephone and get a delightful luncheon companion in fifteen minutes. Never would he again feel the strength of her young arm against his as she drove with him in the park. Never would they again roam around the antique shops and the bookshops laying each other little presents and preparing surprises for their friends. Never again could he summon her taste and judgment when it was a question of buying something for his sister or for another girl.

Gazing Into the Past

And those wonderful nights when the spirit of Haroun-al-Raschid descended on them and they put on inconspicuous clothes and wandered into strange and queer corners of unexplored Manhattan from Corlear's Hook to Abingdon Square, and ate spaghetti at the next table to the leader of the Camorra and chop-suey in a queer little restaurant on the fourth floor back in Pell street, where the Four Brothers held their meetings and planned their murders—they were over.

How beautiful, how fine, and strong, and brave she was!

He remembered that day above Kings bridge when Spindrift shied at an auto and began backing them over an embankment into the path of a construction train. He reached for the reins and she gave him a look that made him jerk his hand as if she had struck it with the butt of the whip.

"Drive on!" she called sharply to the panic-stricken chauffeur. As the car dashed past, the rear wheels of the top were trembling over the edge of the cut, but a blow of the whip sent Spindrift forward like a mad locomotive. In a quarter of a mile she had reduced him to a cowed and conquered walk.

Then she handed Emerson the reins and sank against his shoulder with a convulsive sob.

A Sisterly Kiss

And he had kissed her and calmed her as if she had been his sister, and she had been silent the rest of the way home. He remembered that she had seemed a little distant and strange to him after that.

Ah! If he had only realized then how much he loved—how much he needed her!

It was characteristic of the man that it never occurred to him that even if he had realized that he loved her she might not have loved him in return. And yet he had no great opinion of himself as a charmer. It had simply never struck him as possible that there was any power in heaven on earth that could stop him from getting anything that he wanted badly enough to strive for.

He was convinced that Catherine loved Darwin. He did not know that women sometimes married more from pique than from love. He had seen her yield herself as Darwin kissed her at the altar, and as the picture came back once more he shut his eyes and groaned aloud.

But it was not the fact that he had lost her love that gave a keener edge to his agony. He was a gambler at heart, and if he had played and lost he would have taken defeat like a true gambler.

But he hadn't even gambled. He had let the thing that he wanted most in life slip away from him without playing a single card of his hand.

He looked at his watch again. It was nearly 6 o'clock. The sun had sunk behind the apartment houses on the West Side, and the gray outriders were creeping in among the trees from the east.

He could be again picking

BANKERS TURN AGAINST ROBIN

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Frightened by the drastic methods of the Grand Jury in its investigation of the Northern Bank and Washington Savings Bank failures, officials who have been indicted and others who are in danger of prosecution today appealed to the District Attorney to allow them to turn States evidence against Joseph G. Robin, the bank wrecker.

Several bank officials now have fallen under the shadow of the Grand Jury investigation have expressed their willingness to tell all they know concerning the schemes of Robin, whereby he was assisted to get away with more than $200,000 in bank funds. The District Attorney so far has made no reply to those overtures, but it is expected, in many instances, he will take advantage of the offers. This is thought to mean a clean sweep against Robin and make sure his conviction.

In the case of one indicted official it is said that a statement of his affairs already in the hands of the District Attorney. This statement was voluntarily made and given without any solicitation or compulsion.

Governor Dix is to have his attention called to the fact that for two years the Washington Savings Bank has not had thirteen trustees as required by law.

At the District Attorney's office it is said that this condition of things could not have existed had the reports of the bank examiners if they had been watched. Superintendent Cheney may be called upon to explain.

BIG AUDIENCE ON TOUR WITH HOLMES

Beginning with pictures which made most vivid the subjects of the day's talk in its anger, and incidentally rendering his audience comfortably sensible, Burton Holmes took a large audience on a delightful tour of the most delightful journey from Tsitsikar to Manitou and Harbin in the first lecture of his season. Mr. Holmes said Manitou was perhaps the loveliest city of southern Manchuria. Harbin is a trading city through the war. For the Mordenplatz and the Kaiser Tor, are the two principal streets of Moukden, where the beautiful art foundation and characteristic display of street life, with the passing of the royal guard, were of more interest.

Several familiar old masterpieces were reproduced, including Raphael Madonna, a Botticelli and a Holbein portrait. There were religious spectacles and pageants, including glimpses of the Prince Ludwig of Bavaria and the court, and reviews of garrisons in the Corpus Christi procession.

TO-DAY'S STOCK LIST ON THE JUMP

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Continued buying, mostly by outsiders, caused the market in Wall Street today to move up, practically the entire list scoring gains in the early trading.

The railroad stocks rallied and were strong and active throughout. Canadian Pacific moved up 2 3/8 points. New York Central was the exception in the railroad group, falling off about ¼ point, after moving up to 111. Southern Pacific and Union Pacific were the features of the railroad list, each moving up 1 point and carried the fractions of the Gould interests, Reading was strong.

THEATRE PARTY FIGHTS FLAMES

STRATHAM, N. H., Jan. 14.—Men and women, many of them in evening dress, returning in a special car early to-day from a visit to a theatre in Portsmouth, discovered a fire, aroused the family of Arthur Craig, 3 weeks old, carrying them from probable death, and then fought the flames which destroyed the large barn on the Craig farm.

While some of the theatre party awoke the sleeping inmates, others rushed into the barn and got out several valuable horses and some of the cattle.

DOG SETS FIRE; SIX IN PERIL

Mrs. Isabelle Munsepan and her two children and Mrs. Mary Albano and two grandchildren had a narrow escape from death in a burning tenement house at No. 20 Genesee street, South Boston, to-day. The fire was caused by a toy terrier, Peanits, stealing some matches and gnawing them on a bed, thus igniting the bed clothing. Mrs. Albano was burned about the hands in extinguishing the flames.

Good Things to Eat

Strawberries are cheaper. Hitherto they have been selling for sixty cents a box, the boxes holding about a pint and being about half full. These berries came from California and brought very high prices because they came about a month earlier than the Florida berries. The Florida strawberries have made their appearance now and they sell for a dollar for a full quart box.

Hot house rhubarb is in the market. It sells for twenty-five cents a pound. California asparagus has arrived. It sells for $1.50 a bunch.

Fancy fishes are bringing very high prices at present. Salmon sells for thirty and thirty-five cents, native smelts for about the same price, shad sells for thirty to forty cents and sea trout for twenty-two cents. There are no green mackerel in the market and the few that come from the refrigerators sell for forty cents each. Spanish mackerel sells for twenty-two cents a pound.

Scallops, which were more plentiful in the Fall than they have been for years are now very scarce. Cape scallops have risen from fifty cents to sixty cents a quart and Nantucket scallops to seventy-five cents.

Surrender to Lodge Means Giving Up All

If Senator Lodge's friends have even a little bit of political wisdom THEY will not permit any man, elected as a Democrat, on a platform pledged against Lodge, to vote for Lodge's re-election. This will avoid a grave scandal.

If some of the SO-CALLED Democrats in the General Court do vote for Lodge they will forfeit the right to ever again hold office, and they should be labelled as traitors and driven out of the Democratic party.

If the CORRUPT CORPORATION INTERESTS have the power to coerce feeble-minded legislators to vote for Lodge, it means that these same corrupt corporation interests will have the power to pass ANY SORT of legislation it may please them to enact into law.

If the Democrats surrender to Lodge it will be a NOTICE TO THE COUNTRY that the recent great Foss triumph is barren of victory, and the so-called Democratic legislators are not Democrats at all, merely puppets of trust owners, peddled around like fish to the highest bidder.

If the speeches made yesterday afternoon at the Republican "Fair Play Conference" mean anything, it is that a large number of Republican legislators now classed as Lodge men, are in reality opposed to Lodge, and would like to vote against his re-election.

If the vote in the United States Senate yesterday is a fair indication of what that branch of our national legislature will do, Massachusetts will soon have the privilege of electing its United States Senators by direct vote of the people. The present Lodge contest in Massachusetts seems likely to be the last of its kind that will ever be held here.

THERE MUST BE NO SURRENDER BY DEMOCRATS TO LODGE AND THE CORRUPT INTERESTS THAT NOW SEEK TO RETURN HIM TO THE SENATE.

As Senator Beveridge said in the United States Senate recently, "ONE CORRUPT VOTE MAKES THE WHOLE ELECTION FOUL!"

Women, of Course Your Hat Pins Should Be Regulated by Law

But Why Do You Have Hat Pins AT ALL? Could Anything Be More Preposterous Than Pinning Your Hat On to Your Head?

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal-Examiner

One State has passed a law regulating hatpins. It says that women must put something on the point of the pin to keep the point from putting out human eyes. The law doesn't say whether the point is to be protected with a cork, a small potato, or a patent protector.

The AMERICAN possesses at least one editor who has had a hatpin inserted into his eye by the nodding head of a lady.

It is only just to the lady—a total stranger encountered in the street cars—to say that she showed a proper spirit, and was highly indignant when her attention was humbly called to the fact that her hatpin found a sensitive resting place.

The AMERICAN respects the rights of women. It advocates "Votes for Women." It looks with awe and approval upon suffragettes. It encourages every struggling upward step of womankind from slavery to freedom and the ballot.

Therefore, the AMERICAN has a right to talk to women seriously; it has a right to say to them:

WOMAN, WOMAN, WHY IN THE NAME OF ORDINARY COMMON SENSE DO YOU FASTEN YOUR HATS ON TO YOUR HEAD WITH PINS?

What would women say if men had their hats pinned on? Could anything be more ridiculous than to put a hat made of hard resisting felt on top of a woman's head, press it down with the left hand, and with the right hand stab a sharp, dagger-like pin, with great violence and effort, through two thicknesses of felt and a mass of hair?

Woman, you have existed on this earth tens of thousands, and perhaps hundreds of thousands, of years. You are the heiresses of all the ages. All the discoveries of science and of the dressmakers are at your disposal.

Why don't you invent, or let somebody invent for you, some other way of fastening your hat on to your head?

Woman, the AMERICAN wants to help you in your struggle. But it is hard work to make men feel that the ballot and equality should be enjoyed by a race of human beings still so low in the scale of civilization as to nail their hats to their heads.

Jail for Rich Criminals

The President has performed a notable public service in refusing to make use of his pardoning power to cancel the jail sentence of W. Harlen, a rich man—manager of a great lumber and turpentine business in Florida and Alabama.

This man was found guilty of the crime of peonage—the crime of treating workingmen in his employ as if they were chattel slaves.

He was sentenced to pay a five-thousand-dollar fine and to spend eighteen months in jail.

The President says that fines amount to nothing in such a case—that it is the jail sentence that counts.

With his characteristic conscience and caution, Mr. Taft waded through thousands of pages of printed testimony to make sure he was right. Then he gave a decision which may well serve as a model for all executives who have to do with similar cases.

"When a man of high business standing," says the President, "is convicted of an offense, the punishment should be such as to deter others. Fines are not effective against men of wealth. Imprisonment is necessary.

"To relieve such a man from the prison penalty would break down the authority of law.

"It would give real ground for the contention, so often heard, that it is only the poor criminals that are really punished."

MR. BAKER'S volume, "The Spiritual Unrest," is based upon the following statement by the late Professor William James: "A wave of religious activity, analogous in some respects to the spread of early Christianity, Buddhism and Mohammedism, is passing over our American world."

Mr. Baker endeavors to find the facts concerning this manifestation of religion in some of our typical religious institutions, and considers the slum mission, the rich institutional church, the synagogue, the settlement house, the Emanuel movement. He questions the aim of each of these organized spiritual activities, and its special adaptation to the needs of the time.

His conclusions are based upon personal investigation and upon authentic reports. He finds the churches, however, well organized everywhere deploring the fact that they seem to be losing their hold upon the people. The second generation of Catholics and of Jews drift away from the mother church. In the Protestant churches, the tendency is drawing to young men. Mr. Baker thinks that this defect exists, not because of the poor salaries that are the ministers' average portion, but because the Church now offers no new field for the heroism of spiritual adventure.

The modern artist-religious work he finds to be going on in places like Jerry McAuley's mission in the Bowery. Yet he finds something grotesquely wrong in a civilization that first produces such outcasts, and then tries to reclaim them. Why should we make bold and original boys like our Jerry McAuleys into criminals, and then so laboriously try to save them? Why all these potent agencies of civilization to tear down and ruin men and women? Way only a few feeble "missions" be maintained to drag here and there a single human being from the wholesale wreckage? The following quotation will show Mr. Baker's spirit and point of view:

"The rich people of the uptown churches, indeed, have the poor on their consciences as never before. To meet the condition they have built institutional churches—a good idea, so far as it goes. They are willing to pay a large proportion of the expenses of maintenance, or even all of the expenses; they are willing that the institutional churches should be finer than their own churches; they will even go down and help with the clubs, classes, and Sunday schools. In all these superficial things, in fine singing and praying, they are willing to co-operate; but that is as far as they have got at present. There the co-operation stops short!

"When it comes to extending their religion to a co-operation in business and politics, to banking and underselling—why, on, that cannot be. For 'business is business'—and religion must be kept out of it. They have a gripping idea that the church, if it is to survive, must command the lives of the workingmen (how much we have heard of 'The Church and the Workingman,' 'The Church and the Foreigner,' and so on); but they are not willing to let religion command their own lives. They will worship with the workingmen and then turn around and charge him an exorbitant rental for the house he lives in; they take fat profits on the necessaries of life; they work women and little children long hours for low wages—and out of the proceeds they live luxuriously, while the working-man scrapes along miserably in his lonesomeness. No, it is not real—this religion. It is 'Brother only on Sunday, and the masses of grown men and women in poor neighborhoods know it. They prefer to the doubtful charities of the church, the honest openness of the saloon, the frank cheapness of the gambling theatre, where they can pay for what they get."—E. M.

Round the World in Seven Days

MR. STRANG knows the boys, and the boys, in return, know him. Knowing him, they will not be surprised when he asks them to accompany him round the world, to be guided about one-twelfth the time it took Jules Verne to make the same circuit.

The tale opens with the picture of a ship in the middle of a cyclone. The skipper is prophetic, for the author keeps, from page to page, the cyclone velocity.

It is all so sudden that the young passengers may not be able to tell every detail of the prospect, large and ever varied, but they will have been somewhere and have had an up-to-date outing.

Constrained Attitudes

READERS of the brighter books with an individual flavor will recall Mr. Colby's "Imaginary Obligations," published a few years since. The present collection of essays is kin to it, evidencing the same incisive originality which made the reputation of the former volume.

Politics, culture, literature, art—the author has many highly readable things to say on these and other topics worthy of attention. Two sentences on literature will recall his gift of expression.

"The outskirts of literature, like the fringe of our best society, are full of queer, meticulous beings, concerned with illeaven known what passwords and cachets and easily horrified gentilities—anxious debutantes of what's what and who's who, and the minutiae of precedence and the things one ought to read, or know, and the lies and cuts of literary table manners. And the man who slips Walter Pater in the cabin account as one seen with the man who eats raw kipling with a knife."

A Day and Its Dreams

JAMES P. WHEDON is a Chicago business man who finds time and pleasure in and for the cultivation of the gentle muse, and who believes that a part of every man's life may be devoted to things somewhat out-of-the scope of world business. Mr. Whedon has just put upon the market an expression of his poetic thought that will be appreciated not merely by his personal friends, but by all readers who have with him a sympathetic feeling for a fine thought delicately expressed. His little book is entitled "A Day and Its Dreams," and takes its name from the opening song of eight lines. The book in its general appearance is as dainty as the work which Mr. Whedon has invished upon the contents and will prove a graceful souvenir from and to those of the poetic impulse. Both verse and its setting are distinctly of the "Made in Chicago" brand, and both are worthy a discriminating and interested public.

The Sword Maker

MR. BARR'S last romance tells how Prince Roland and his band of swordmakers faced the robber barons and the archbishops on the shores of the Rhine in those fierce old Germanic wars long ago.

The author, as his readers know, has been over this ground before, and proved his thorough acquaintance with it, also his ability to draw from it something more than the dry detail of what is too often charitably termed the "historic novel."

The Emeperor's son, with the assistance of the author, keeps things moving at a pace worthy of this age of unlimited swiftness and the ascendancy of the automobile.

Mrs. Gates's Poems

THE author of the familiar verses beginning "Sleep sweet within this quiet room" has brought together her poems in book form. It is a small but characteristic collection, addressed—the opening poem at least—to the peoples of the future.

The author's sympathies take a wide range. She regards herself habitually as a part of the great whole, and out of this integrity springs much of her inspiration.

"Take me back, ye elements,
Take me home,
One with isle and continent,
Air and fire and sea."

Again, she will write a part of old Nature's peaceful heart:

"A calm and generous heart pulses under these verses, exemplified perhaps as well as elsewhere in the last stanza of the poem, "The Last Days":

"Ah, love, my love, in last, last days,
How sweet the roses seem!
While yet a little light delays,
Back comes the morning dream.
In tents of peace, with perfect trust
That youth may never pass,
Though half our idols lie in dust,
How fond the heart can grow!"

The Girl I Loved

ALBEIT an apparently hardened backhelor, James Whitcomb Riley has taken as the scene of his new book of poems "The Girl I Loved." He has probably loved many girls in his time, but that's his own business. The story is that of an honest, rugged farmer, and this continued poem tells the simple recital of his life, but tells it with such a natural dramatic diff and such a clever beguiling of the reader to the very end that we follow it absorbed.

"The Girl I Loved" is a complete love novel, a whole book, in twenty stanzas. Yet we see the plain, happy, prosperous narrator both as he is now and when he and Mary were mere "chunks o' shavers," we are blushing gentle Mary exhibiting her love for another man to him in a burst of entirely confidence, and we realize the "pure happiness" of the denouement as keenly as if many pages had been devoted to their description. The cover design and tinted drawings by Howard Chandler Christy, and the marginal decorations by Margaret Anderson have made the book as delightful to look at as it is to read.

The Spirit of Democracy

DR. LYMAN ABBOTT, one of the few sane, intelligent critics of matters in general, has written a noteworthy book on the essentials of democracy. It is refreshing to read such pages, safe and sane, aglow with good practical idealism.

The author's definition of democracy sounds the keynote. It is a spirit which, in so far as a spirit can be embodied in a creed, may be expressed by the statement that not only government, but wealth, education, art, literature, religion—in a single word life—is, in the divine order, intended for the people, and, in the ultimate state of society, will be so controlled and administered by the people for the benefit of all. Thus defined, democracy is not only a political opinion, it is also a religious faith.

Famous Scouts

THE "Famous Leaders" series has been enriched by the addition of a volume devoted to the exploits of the famous scouts, ranging down from old Israel Putnam to Buffalo Bill. In this interesting book for boys, Mr. Charles H. L. Johnston has given biographical sketches, historical incidents and diverting anecdotes of the famous men whose exploits appeal so strongly to the imagination of youth, and whose deeds are so intimately associated with the history and development of the country. Every boy likes to read of old Put and Daniel Boone and Kit Carson and Sam Houston and Wild Bill Hickock and the others well entitled to recognition in a book of this nature. Many illustrations add to the interest of the volume which will find its way to many a boy's library.
